Q26: For SERVICES: What are the most important sources of trade costs for the export of services from developing countries? (You may tick more than 1 box)

Other (please specify)
This question is simply too broad to answer

Q27: Additional information.

The relative weight of various elements that may inhibit trade in services will vary depending on such factors as the service being provided, the mode of supply through which the provider is seeking to operate, the policies and conditions of the Member in which the service supplier is located, the policies and conditions of the Member in which the customer is located and the circumstances of the particular service supplier in question. Even if all of these factors were specified, available data concerning trade in services is likely to be insufficient to allow reliable quantification of the relative weights of the elements identified in the question. Finally, we note that there may be significant overlap between the identified elements such that assigning a value to one element rather than another may be arbitrary.

Q28: Does your Aid-for-Trade strategy specifically address the issue of trade costs?

No

Q41: Which disciplines of the Trade Facilitation Agreement do you think will prove the hardest for developing countries to implement and where Aid-for-Trade support should be focused? (You may tick more than 1 box)

Publication and availability of information,

Comment before entry into force,

Advance rulings, Disciplines on fees,

Release and clearance of goods,

Border agency cooperation,

Formalities connected with importation, exportation and transit,

Establishment and / or continued operation of national committee
Q42: Additional information.

This question is worded poorly, as it assumes that aid for trade should only be focused in those areas that are the hardest for developing countries to implement. There are a number of factors that go into determinations on where aid for trade support should be focused - not simply "the hardest to implement." Certain areas are not likely to be the hardest to implement - such as publication or comment before entry into force - yet are areas where Aid for Trade should certainly be focused.

Q43: Will the Trade Facilitation Agreement, when adopted, benefit other development programmes that you operate?

Yes

Q44: Please specify the other programmes that Trade Facilitation Agreement implementation would benefit when adopted: (You may tick more than 1 box)

- Positive spin-offs on governance programmes
- Other (please specify) positive spin-offs on SME programs, agriculture programs. Would also help with health programs bringing in supplies for public health systems.

Q45: Additional information.

It would seem that if costs and delays associated with moving goods are reduced, there could be a benefit to humanitarian aid as well - however most of our humanitarian aid for crisis/disasters moves through special channels, thus we are unable to clearly answer this.

Q46: Do you track trade costs as part of your Aid-for-Trade programmes?

Yes

Q47: How do you track trade costs?(You may tick more than 1 box)

- As part of project/programme theory of change/logframes/results-based management approaches
- In ex post evaluations

Q48: Additional information.
