Background

The sustainable development prospects are at stake since quite a long time already, and the current comprehensive perspective is well represented by the UN Agenda and the SDGs.

Such a concept acquires peculiar and prominent implications when considered from the local level upwards, focusing the specific role of local governments, and when referred to a complex context such as the mountain one and even more to the highly anthropized Alpine mountain landscape, the highest urbanised mountains worldwide. In this landscape, the pandemic is raising further criticalities, but also possible new opportunities, while looking at sustainable development.

Invited speakers will discuss the outstanding issues, challenges and opportunities the sustainable development and the green economy pose for local alpine communities, taking the angle of the local authorities and municipalities – medium and small ones in particular – and calling them to act in order to seize the SDGs opportunities for their communities across the Alps.

The Webinar is organised by the OECD Trento Centre for Local Development in collaboration with ANCI FVG (Italian National Municipality Association - Friuli Venezia Giulia Section) as part of its NextPA Project, and the Green Economy Observatory, Bocconi University - GREEN.
