

Areas for discussion:

1. Health and environmental impacts of long-chain PFCs

- There is a lot of information available on PFCs. Is it being shared effectively? How can the information sharing be improved?
- What additional information would help to advance our understanding of PFCs?

2. Supporting countries to reduce the emissions and product content of long-chain PFCs: Regulatory approaches and/or stewardship programs

- How can regulatory and stewardship approaches be promoted at the national and international level?
- What issues are countries facing in taking regulatory actions and/or in setting up stewardship programs to reduce the emissions and product content of long-chain PFCs?
- What additional information is needed to help reduce use and exposure to long-chain PFCs, including best available technology, best available practices, and alternative chemicals?

3. Identification of production and use of long-chain PFCs: OECD PFC survey and Stockholm Convention reporting requirements

- Is the OECD PFC survey applicable to your country? If not, why?
- Would you be willing to work with companies in your country to encourage their participation in such surveys?
- How can reporting be improved and what other methodological changes would you suggest for the survey?
- What type of assistance would governments and/or industry need to participate in the long chain PFCs production and use surveys?

4. Role of stakeholders: Industry and other non-governmental representatives

- How can the range of stakeholders (e.g., industry, environmental groups and IGOs) support the efforts to reduce production and use of long-chain PFCs and support the transition to safer alternatives?
- How can various stakeholders promote regulatory and stewardship approaches at the national and international level?

5. Actions that the PFCs Global Group could undertake

- Would you be willing to join the PFCs Global Group?
- What are your recommendations on increasing participation in the PFC Global Group?
- What actions would you recommend to the PFCs Global Group to support countries in managing long-chain PFCs and the transitioning to safer alternatives?
- Do you have recommendations on how to improve the PFCs web portal?

- What topics should be covered in future webinars?
