REGIONAL SEMINAR ON
“Corruption-Free Cities of the Future”

Hosted by the Government of Albania and co-organised by UNDP, the Anti-Corruption Network of OECD, and Regional Anti-Corruption Initiative (RAI)

Tirana, Albania
7-8 December 2017
Concept and draft programme
In 2016, 54% of people lived in cities; the UN estimates that by 2050, 66 percent of the world’s population will be inhabiting in urban areas. Cities and subnational governments are frequently the hotbed of innovation, have autonomy over distribution of resources in many places, are in closer proximity to people and play a key intermediary role vis-a-vis national governments. The extent to which basic services are provided to citizens fairly and equitably, largely depends on the professionalism and integrity of these governments, and their ability to fulfill their functions in a transparent, responsive and accountable manner. Local governments and municipalities are also the primary interface between citizen and elected representatives, and as such represent a major opportunity for trust-building and participatory decision-making. Local governments are not protected from state capture and abuse of power, such as petty or grand corruption. In fact, municipalities can be particularly vulnerable to corruption due to their tight networks of power and their central role in delivering basic services. Most often, bribes are paid to local governments in exchange for construction permits, business licenses, land registration, social welfare benefits, or simply in exchange for getting a job or winning a business contract with the local government. For example, according to 2010 UNODC survey, 41.7% of surveyed adult population believed that corruption is widespread in local municipalities in Tirana, the capital of Albania.¹

Corruption risks pose a threat to the universal access to basic services, sustainable cities and local development. This can significantly impede implementation of the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), adopted by the UN General Assembly in 2015, especially in reaching out the most vulnerable population segments. According to the United Nations Convention Against Corruption ‘corruption hurts the poor disproportionately…[as it feeds] inequality and injustice…and is a major obstacle to poverty alleviation and development.’ In fact, substantially reducing corruption and bribery, and developing effective, accountable and transparent institutions at all levels are targets of SDG 16 on peaceful, just and inclusive societies. These targets are considered key enablers for reaching targets across all the SDGs, including SDG 11 on sustainable cities.

The Governments in the Western Balkans, South Caucasus and Western CIS have been engaging in reorganizing the sub-national level of governance usually with the intent of increasing local responsiveness and decentralizing power, which involves the process of redistributing power, responsibilities and funds between the central government and smaller administrative units. Those processes offer unmatched opportunities to design institutions and mechanisms with limited risks of corruption and increased openness and responsiveness to citizens’ needs.

While it is challenging to operate clean and efficient services in countries with captured national systems, individual mayors around the world have demonstrated that simple changes and solutions can impact the culture and functioning of local institutions and reduce the weight of corruption on their constituencies. Many municipalities have used the “Islands of Integrity” methodology, developed by the four-time Mayor of La Paz, Bolivia, Ronald Maclean Abaroa and the Founder of Partners Foundation for Local Development (FPDL), Ana Vasilache to scale up this successful experience in fighting corruption. The approach is rooted in the active participation of public leaders, managers and employees, as well as other interested stakeholders, in the diagnosis and solutions finding processes based on the analysis of factors that breed corruption.

Through enhanced systems of public administration, transparent and accountable processes and open and responsive public services and municipal owned enterprises, local governments can profoundly alter the way citizens relate to and access essential services and local development. Advancements in new technologies have helped to open up new avenues for improving services and promoting participation and partnership at the local government and community level.

Strong social contracts are particularly important at the local level. Local governments in the region have a history working with civil society especially in the provision of social services, and more recently by experimenting with co-creation methodologies, especially in the development of digital tools. These developments are fragmented across the region, and are counteracted with shrinking civic space, limited availability of resources for civil society and weakening of legitimacy, especially vis-à-vis communities they are meant to represent.

There are a range of innovative methods that have arisen to promote transparency, integrity and accountability at the local level, including by:

- Supporting municipalities to reduce the risks and opportunities for corruption in their licensing, procurement or service delivery systems by simplifying processes and increasing transparency or by developing modern state-of-the-art service delivery;
- Facilitating the publication and visualization of municipal data and information to enable clearer communication from the local bodies and public oversight and watchdog’s activities;
- Using ICT, open data and innovative tools to co-create and improve communication with citizens and their municipality, as well as to get feedback and exchange more directly and easily on improving services and issues that matter to them;

2 With funding from MFA Romania, UNDP implements, with Partners Global, the “Promoting integrity and anti-corruption at the local level in the Eastern Partnership Area” project, through which the “Islands of Integrity” methodology has been applied in Georgia, Moldova and Ukraine.
• Working with citizens and civil society organizations on holding municipalities accountable while supporting municipalities to develop response mechanisms to citizen demands and complaints.

OBJECTIVES

The regional conference will provide an opportunity to exchange experiences about achievements and challenges in preventing corruption at the local level, including by cities, regions and other sub-national levels of public administration. The discussion will enable the identification of examples of successful tools and good practices, and will contribute to the development of regional recommendations on this subject. UNDP will present a draft Toolkit on Corruption-Free Cities, incorporating real time visualization of the conference discussions, to provide local administrations, as well as donors and civil society organizations a set of practical tools to design and implement integrity plans at the local level. The proceedings of the regional conference will be reflected in a Thematic Study that will be prepared by the OECD/ACN.

Specifically, the regional conference will pursue the following objectives to:

• Create awareness on SDGs, specifically on SDG16 with the focus on the role of local governments and anti-corruption;
• Provide a forum for the key stakeholders responsible for the design and implementation of anti-corruption and integrity initiatives at the local level;
• Highlight the existing anti-corruption tools and methodologies available for municipalities and local governments to assess and measure sector specific corruption risks and vulnerabilities;
• Facilitate contacts and exchange between “Islands of Integrity” Network (cases of positive deviance at the local level), willing mayors and local practitioners able to facilitate anti-corruption work at the local level.
• Contribute to the development of the regional thematic study with recommendations on the integrity at the local level.

WORKING METHODS

The conference will last for 2 days and will take place in Tirana, Albania on 7-8 December 2017. The programme will include a mix of Davos-type plenary sessions, workshops and TED style talks to ensure maximum information and knowledge exchange throughout the conference. Methods for engagement will also include a speed dating exercise, engagement with civil society organizations and live-sketching illustrations in order to capture and visualize talks, presentations and workshops.
The event will be concluded by the Government of Albania, UNDP, OECD and RAI highlighting the key outcomes and the way forward.

PARTICIPANTS

The regional conference will bring together around 80 participants from selected country representatives from Eastern Europe and the OECD members that are in charge of prevention of corruption at the local level, including practitioners from the central government bodies and local level officials responsible for integrity and corruption prevention at the level of cities and regions, academics and civil society organizations engaged in promoting of integrity and prevention of corruption at the local level:

- anti-corruption practitioners, including from among the local governments and municipalities (mayors/deputy mayors, heads of departments) and anti-corruption agencies;
- civil society representatives, academia and media representatives; and
- international organisations.

EXPECTED RESULTS

The conference is expected to result in:

- Better understanding of SDGs and the role of local governments, civil society and private sector in implementing and monitoring the agenda at the local level;
- Improved understanding of potential vulnerabilities to corruption as well as accountability mechanisms in the public and business sector;
- Better understanding of the need for constructive engagement of national authorities (anti-corruption agencies) with local governments and the need to go beyond compulsory integrity plans in their support to municipalities;
- Strengthening of the “Islands of Integrity” network and increasing visibility and impact of municipalities currently developing positive transparency and accountability case studies;
- UNDP Toolkit for Corruption-Free Cities; and
- ACN thematic study with regional recommendations.

CONFERENCE LANGUAGE

The working language of the Conference will be English with simultaneous translation to Russian, Albanian and BCMS.
COSTS

Organisers will cover the costs of participation by providing a lump sum to cover travel expenses and providing an accommodation in a hotel.

Venue

The Seminar will take place in Hotel Plaza, Tirana, 28 Nentori Street, Tirana Albania.
