

Mr. Alexander Sarris – Brief note

Alexander Sarris is currently Director of the Trade and Markets Division, of FAO. He is also Professor in the Department of Economics, University of Athens, Greece (currently on leave). He holds a PhD in economics from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, USA, and has taught at the Department of Agricultural and Resource Economics of the University of California at Berkeley, USA. He has authored or co-authored more than 15 books and monographs, and more than 70 journal and book articles on various issues of international trade and development. Prior to joining FAO, he has advised extensively FAO and other UN organizations, the World Bank, the European Commission, and other national and international agencies, and has field research and policy advice experience in over 20 countries.