

Joonghae Suh

Joonghae Suh is a Fellow at the Korea Development Institute (KDI) since 2000. For the recent two years, he had worked for the Korean government as a Senior Policy Councilor and Director General for Strategic Planning Bureau at the Ministry of Planning and Budget. Before joining KDI, he had worked at United Nations University Institute for New Technologies in Maastricht, the Netherlands as a research fellow for two years and Science and Technology Policy Institute in Seoul as a senior researcher for four years. Dr. Suh received Ph.D. degree in Economics from the University of California, Los Angeles in 1993. As an economist, he has maintained varied interests in the issues related to economic development and international trade, but his recent research has been devoted to the empirical studies on the sources of industrial competitiveness with special focus on firm's innovative activities. He has worked, as a consultant, with international organizations such as OECD, World Bank and UNIDO for many occasions.
