

DOUGLAS LIPPOLDT is a senior economist and policy analyst with the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development in Paris (1992 - present). His current assignment in the Directorate for Science, Technology and Industry focuses on innovation and the economy. In recent years, he published a number of papers, briefs and articles on trade, intellectual property and development issues while working for the OECD Trade and Agriculture Directorate. During the 1990s he managed a number of projects related to economic transition in Russia and Eastern Europe, producing a series of publications on adjustment-related topics. He was also a contributing author for a series of labour market studies of OECD member countries. Prior to coming to the OECD, he worked 10 years for the US Government as an international economist on trade policy, labour market and economic development issues. Currently, he has an academic affiliation with the Groupe d'Économie Mondiale at Sciences Po in Paris.
