

Marc Owen joined the Home Office in 2002 having worked in magazine publishing. After stints reforming the law on sexual offences and delivering innovative services to treat mentally disordered offenders he moved to immigration. While head of immigration policy he was one of the principal designers of the UK's points-based system for immigration. He is now head of strategy for the UK Border Agency.