

GRAHAM TESKEY

Graham Teskey is head of Governance and Social development in DFID. After graduate studies in economics and planning, Graham spent six years as working as an economist in the south Pacific. From 1985-1993 he taught development studies at the Development and Project Planning Centre at the University of Bradford in the north of England, a period which included two years in rural Tanzania working for NORAD. He joined DFID (ODA) as an economist in 1993, and since then has had spells in Fiji, London, Nairobi and Uganda. Now working in London, Graham was Head of Africa Policy Department until 2005, when he took up his current post of Deputy Director in Policy and Research Division. He oversaw the governance dimensions of the UK Government's 2006 White paper and is now working on a range of issues relating to state-building and democratisation.
