ANTI-CARTEL ENFORCEMENT

AND

UNILATERAL PRACTICES THAT MAY RAISE ANTITRUST CONCERNS

Schedule of Events

This seminar will explore a variety of issues covered under Indonesian Law No. 5/1999. The nature of this law is quite broad and covers oligopoly behaviour, price fixing, price discrimination, predation, and exclusivity of various types as well as other issues. As a result close attention will be devoted toward the practical issue of separating non cooperative oligopoly interaction from cartel conduct and the law and economics of practices that facilitate cartel adherence. Actual data from the well-known international Lysine cartel will be examined and participants will attempt to determine the market price but for the illegal conduct in that case using a variety of techniques. Further, participants will present several case studies and at the end of the seminar, participants will apply lessons from the event to the case studies that were presented. During another part of this event, the law and economics of predation, exclusive dealing, exclusive territories and price discrimination will be discussed. Participants will learn how to separate beneficial competition from illegal conduct designed to harm competitors and injure consumers. Once again, participants will present several case studies and the lessons from the event will be applied. At the end of the seminar, participants should be able to apply the lessons learned to cases involving large retailers, such as hypermarkets, to differential pricing by firms to various distributors and retailers and to cases involving exclusivity.
