Assessing Antitrust Market Definition and Competitive Effects with Applications to a Hypothetical Merger Case Study

27 June -1st July 2005

Introduction

This seminar will explore useful ways of defining antitrust markets and assessing competitive effects. Topics to be discussed include: the historical role of price correlation analysis in market definition; under what circumstances product shipment patterns can be used to understand the likelihood of harm from a merger; useful market definition indices; the role of consumer choice, entry and exit in assessing market definition; as well as state of the art merger simulation exercises. In addition, participants will work through a case study involving a hypothetical merger of branded products. Participants will conduct interviews, examine documents, analyze data using techniques learned in class, and develop an outline of the way the case might be litigated in court. A defence team will also prepare their case and there will be a trial and a decision at the end of the week. During that exercise participants will learn that appropriate remedies to ameliorate competition concerns can be divestitures of certain assets.
