EXPERTS MEETING – LATIN AMERICAN ECONOMIC OUTLOOK 2010: “MIGRATION & DEVELOPMENT IN LATIN AMERICA”

I. Context: the OECD Development Centre and the Latin American Economic Outlook

The OECD Development Centre (www.oecd.org/dev) conducts comparative analysis and promotes informal policy dialogue on development issues of mutual interest to OECD member countries and emerging and developing economies, including those in Latin America. Six Latin American countries—Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Mexico and Peru—are full members of the OECD Development Centre, represented on its Governing Board. The Centre also has an extensive network of counterparts in Latin America, both in academic and policy making circles.

The Latin American Economic Outlook (LEO) is the annual flagship publication by the OECD Development Centre’s Latin America and Caribbean Desk. The first edition of the Latin American Economic Outlook (LEO) was presented in November 2007 in Santiago de Chile and the second edition in El Salvador, again at the occasion of the Ibero-American summit. The first edition (LEO 2008) explored some of the critical long-term challenges facing Latin America, and the most recent report (LEO 2009) analysed the channels by which fiscal policy serves, or fails, Latin American development. In its third edition, LEO 2010 will try to provide a better understanding of the linkages between migration and development in Latin America and on how migration contributes to growth and development in the region.

II. Migration and Development in Latin America: leading questions

More than 20 million Latin Americans live outside the country of their birth. International migration directly touches the lives of millions more in the region: the families, neighbours, regions and in some cases the macro economies of the migrants’ home countries. One of the most important economic dimensions of migration in Latin America is remittances, which began to slow down in 2008 after years of rapid growth. Both migration and remittances have multiple implications—positive and negative—for development. Innovative approaches to migration by governments, migrants, firms and others may provide powerful means, with which to weather the current economic crisis and promote economic development in the region.

The Latin American Economic Outlook 2010 (LEO 2010) builds on the work on migration already carried out by the OECD and the Development Centre, and other leading research institutions such as the Inter-American Development Bank and the World Bank. Its objective is to produce high-quality research evidence on how migration and remittances influence development in Latin America, drawing conclusions and practical recommendations for policymakers and other key actors on how they can maximise the potential of migration and remittances towards boosting well-being in the region. The experts gathered at this meeting are invited to explore linkages between migration and different dimensions of development in Latin America.

III. Structure of the meeting

The format of the event is very informal and we encourage all participants to enter into the discussion. For this purpose, the structure of the sessions will be quite open; more than half of each session will be dedicated to a roundtable debate.

Each session will be preceded by a presentation by its authors of a Latin American Economic Outlook 2010 draft chapter. A preliminary analysis on those presentations will be carried out by the panellists of each session and the discussion will then be opened to comments and reactions from the audience.

The meeting will begin with a first introduction to the Latin American Economic Outlook 2010 and this will be followed by 5 topical sessions as described in the agenda. The meeting will be held in English and Spanish and there will be simultaneous translation available for both languages.
