The Citizen’s Defender
On 1st October 1998 the institution of “Citizen’s Defender” was created in Greece. It is made up of an Ombudsman appointed for five years, a staff of 70 and a secretariat. Their task is to protect citizens’ rights, fight maladministration and oversee the implementation of the rule of law in public services, local government and public enterprises.

The Values Commission
The Norwegian government has established a Values Commission to look into values and ethics. The commission will not deliver any fixed conclusions or decisions during its three years of work. Rather, it will serve to launch a national discussion aimed at promoting positive community values and wider democratic participation, to help people and organisations communicate about values and ethics, and to gather information on people’s opinions, choices and priorities concerning values.

Evaluating the public sector
Established in 1981, Sweden’s Expert Group on Public Finance (ESO) commissions studies on budgetary and economic policy-making. Although it was created as an ad hoc group, its work continues to be useful and topical. It covers local and regional as well as central government activities, and has focused special attention on questions concerning the productivity and efficiency of the public sector. ESO is an independent committee of up to 15 members appointed by the Minister of Finance. ESO’s recent reports are listed in Focus On-Line (http://www.oecd.org/puma/focus/compend/se.htm).

Committee on citizen’s choice
In September 1998, the Danish Ministry of Finance set up a committee on citizen’s choice in public services. The committee’s tasks are to map the extent of citizen’s choice in public services offered by local authorities, identify barriers to increasing citizen’s choice, suggest ways to increase citizen’s choice at municipal level, and develop possibilities for offering citizens comparative quality evaluations of local institutions and services.

Analysing compliance
The Dutch Ministry of Justice, in collaboration with the Sanders Institute, has developed a list of factors determining the compliance of individuals and organisations with the law, known as the Table of Eleven (T11). The eleven factors are grouped under three headings: spontaneous compliance dimensions, control dimensions and sanction dimensions. T11 has proven particularly useful in two ways: as a checklist in the preparation of legislation, and as a classification principle in the analysis of enforcement and compliance bottlenecks.

Guidelines on governance
In April 1998 the Finnish government passed a resolution on “High-Quality Services, Good Governance and a Responsible Civic Society”. The resolution provides public management guidelines for the new, decentralised state sector, to help it ensure the equitable provision of high-quality public services and meet the challenges of globalisation, citizen demands and decreasing economic resources. The resolution and background material have been published and are available in English and Finnish from the Finnish Ministry of Finance (see http://www.oecd.org/puma/focus/pubs.htm).
Managing Commonwealth property

In Australia, Commonwealth Property Principles were adopted in 1996 that govern decisions on investment, divestment and retention of Commonwealth-owned property. Applying the Principles to domestic assets resulted in the planned divestment of A$800 million worth of property. The remaining properties and property services are managed on a commercial basis, with user charging, commercial leases, outsourced property management services and a rate of return. This process is now being extended to overseas assets. The Principles are available on the Internet at http://www.dofa.gov.au/dpg/cpp/.

Performance agreements

To promote private investment and results-oriented management in state-owned petrochemical companies, Mexico is introducing performance agreements. The first agreement of this type was signed between the Ministries of Energy, Finance and Administrative Development and Petrochemical Morelos in September 1998. The Board of Directors, which includes representatives of the various ministries, has been substantially strengthened and given control over many budget and policy aspects. The company will be completely independent in its cash management function, in exchange for meeting economic, financial and operational targets.

One-stop shop for businesses

To reduce administrative burdens on businesses, Italy has introduced “one-stop shops”. These units, which are run by local governments, provide information and advice, as well as all permits, authorisations and licenses needed for the start-up of a new industrial plant or the expansion, renovation or restructuring of an existing one. Nearly 40 different procedures involving several agencies are being replaced by a single procedure, and other mechanisms are being put in place to streamline and speed up the authorisation process.

Mesure de la performance dans le service public : exemples étrangers pour les pouvoirs publics belges.

Conclusions
Services fédéraux des Affaires scientifiques, techniques et culturelles, Belgium, 1998
61 pages

This comparative study explores performance management in the public service in four countries: Canada, Finland, the Netherlands and Sweden. It examines the background and main initiatives of performance measurement, as well as the major actors involved. Various aspects of performance measurement systems are studied, such as their creation, the choice of indicators used, auditing, quality, and the use of performance information. The study also looks at the Belgian federal government in the light of several observations drawn from the international comparison. Available in French only from:

The Results Act: Assessment of the Governmentwide Performance Plan for Fiscal Year 1999
United States General Accounting Office, September 1998
37 pages, GAO/AIMD/GGD-98-159

In 1993, Congress enacted the Government Performance and Results Act to address the growing public demand that government become more effective and less costly. This report was prepared in response to a request from Congress for a separate review of the federal government performance plan. The specific objectives were to assess whether the plan complies with the Act’s statutory requirements and congressional intent, and to assess the plan in the context of guidance developed for agency performance plans and the expectations of Congress. Managing for Results: An Agenda to Improve the Usefulness of Agencies’ Annual Performance Plans
United States General Accounting Office, September 1998
48 pages, GAO/GGD/AIMD-98-228

The Government Performance and Results Act of 1993 is the centerpiece of a statutory framework put in place by Congress to strengthen federal decisionmaking and accountability and to improve federal effectiveness and efficiency by promoting a new focus on results, service quality, and customer satisfaction. With the annual performance plans for fiscal year 1999, agencies have for the first time made a systematic attempt to establish performance goals and related measures for a given year. This report was prepared in response to a request from Congress for summary information on the reviews of individual agency performance plans. The specific objectives were to summarise observations on the agencies’ performance plans, and to identify opportunities to improve the usefulness of future performance plans for decision-makers. Good governance for social and economic development

A December workshop organised by PUMA focused on public management in support of social and economic objectives. This was part of an OECD programme of policy dialogue between the Organisation and non-Member economies. The meeting brought together more than 70 government officials and experts both from OECD Member countries and non-Member economies including Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Chinese Taipei, Hong Kong, India, Malaysia, Philippines, Singapore, South Africa and Thailand. Below is a summary of the statement by the Chairs: Mr. Magnus Petursson, Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Finance, Iceland, and Mr. Claudio Orrego Larrain, Executive Secretary, Inter-ministerial Committee for the Modernisation of Public Management, Chile. The full text can be found on PUMA’s Web site at: http://www.oecd.org/governance/emef.

Ensuring development
Systems of governance affect the performance of the state and, through this, the performance of countries in meeting their major economic and social goals. Governments create the conditions for the functioning of markets, the operation of private firms, the strength of civil society, and the welfare of communities and individuals. Good governance is an important contributor to the sustainability and strength of democracies.

Social progress and economic growth depend on the quality of regulations, because these set frameworks for social and economic activity. Governments need to build capacity to ensure effective regulatory management that would help to remove cumbersome and counter-productive regulations and unnecessary restrictions in society.

Apart from the concern for greater efficiency and effectiveness, other factors or values have become objectives of reform. These include transparency, accountability, equity and participation. These democratic values support government efficiency. They also add vital dimensions to public management reforms.

Drivers of reform
Fiscal deficits have in most countries been one of the driving forces of reform. However, after reducing fiscal pressures many countries saw benefit from public management reforms directed towards several goals that are not exclusively related to fiscal crisis, such as service quality, accountability, citizen involvement and the role of government.

It is now also recognised that the size of the state should no longer be the starting point for public sector reforms, but considered within the wider context of the role of government. What should be the role of government in society and the economy? How are vital societal roles distributed? How does the central government relate to other levels of government, semi-public institutions, the private sector, and citizens? Reassessing these different relationships can lead to reductions in the size of government.

Globalisation has also become a driver of reforms. It reduces the scope for governments to compensate for structural weaknesses through national macroeconomic policies. It also puts pressure on governments to improve governance in order to overcome economic, political, social, and management challenges.

Focus on citizens
Citizens have become another driving force of reform. Their expectations bring important pressure to bear in favour of change and improvement, and this in turn enhances democratic quality. Reform policies and strategies cannot be implemented efficiently if they are not supported by the public.

This focus on citizens has led to the decentralisation and devolution of responsibilities. It is thought that if decisions are made as close to the users as possible, government efficiency and effectiveness will improve.

Public Sector Reforms
The nature of reforms was also discussed at the meeting. Here are some points that emerged:

• Results-oriented management should be given special attention, because it helps organisations to develop capacities and deliver services at desired cost and quality.

• Competent civil servants and effective systems to manage them are needed to support social and economic development.

• Changing the organisational culture and attitudes should be given priority.
