PERMISSIONS TO RE-USE COPYRIGHTED NON-OECD MATERIAL
Guidelines on when and how to obtain permissions

The OECD cannot republish copyrighted material without written permission from either the author or the copyright owner.

Please find below some useful information on when and how to obtain permissions.

1. Your responsibility:
   - Ensure that you have permission for any reproduction of copyrighted non-OECD material which you wish to include in your publication. This concerns portions of text or data, images, maps, photographs, tables, graphs, artwork, quotations, etc. The exceptions for which you do not need permission are listed under point 2 below.
   - It is your responsibility to identify the owner of the rights (publisher or author), to contact them, to obtain the permission to reproduce the material and to pay the fee, if any.
     NB: Fees vary but you may be asked to pay up to 190 euros per thousand words unless you can plead special status of OECD as an international organisation, whose activities are non-profit or special circumstances such as a low print run. Argue your case! –copyright owners have been known to waive fees entirely.
   - We recommend that you use the Permission Request Form (Annex 1). Attaching a copy of the material you wish to use to the permission request you send to the author/publisher often eases the process.
     NB1: Permissions requested and granted by e-mail or through an online procedure are valid.
     NB2: The absence of a response cannot be considered as permission.
   - Make sure that you cite the source of the material properly (see point 5 below).
   - Transmit all permissions to PAC (via your communication coordinator) when submitting your manuscript.
   - You will remain responsible for following up on outstanding permissions after submission of the manuscript to PAC.
   - Keep track of all permissions obtained. Please use the attached Spreadsheet (Annex 2); this spreadsheet should be shared with PAC.

2. You don’t need permission for:
   - Materials in the public domain. Do not assume that material which is freely available, including on the internet, is in the public domain unless it is specifically indicated with the material. Publication and free access do not change the copyright.
   - Mathematical and chemical equations.
   - Very short quotations provided the source is indicated. This case falls under the description of “fair use” (US) or “fair dealing”. For most publishers an excerpt covered by “fair use” is up to 300 words in a single extract. If in doubt, seek out the owner of the copyright. This concept is subjective, but usually applies to a short excerpt and is always attributed.
     NB1: “Fair use” is not a wholesale licence to copy, provided you don’t charge or that you are an educational institution.
     NB2: Fair use does not apply to photographs.

3. Rights & Licences:
   - You need to obtain the permission from the copyright owner to include the copyrighted material in your publication and all subsequent editions of it, in print and electronic form (including downloadable files, web pages, dynamic graphics, images and slide shows), in all languages published by OECD or its licensees for distribution throughout the world. You should also inform

---

Guidelines on using factual data and database extractions will be circulated as soon as they are available.
the copyright owner that OECD may adapt the material (graphs, tables, maps, photos) in line with its publication standards (e.g. to change the colours or adapt the size. (Please note that this information is included in the Permission Request Form – Annex 1.)

- For photographs, you may have to obtain more than one permission: (1) from the photographer, and (2) from the creator of the underlying work shown in the photograph. Also, permission may be needed for photographs depicting recognisable people, with the exception of public figures.
- Re-publication of third-party material licensed under Creative Commons requires that mention of the license be made in the publication (See point 5 below). Please note that Creative Commons licenses are not intended to apply to software.
- Re-publication of material licensed under GNU Free documentation (such as Wikipedia or Wikimedia material) requires that the user include a copy of the GNU Licence (approx. 2 pages) in the OECD publication. This being a problem for printed material, we recommend that you avoid using material under such licence. For permission to use Wikipedia/Wikimedia material outside these terms, you must contact all the volunteer authors of the text or illustration in question.
- The terms and conditions of 1) the use and publication of statistical data shared by OECD and other partners (universities, research institutes, etc.) or member and non-member countries and other entities or 2) the publication of the results of the joint work with these partners are determined in formal co-operation agreements entitled ‘Memorandum of Understanding’ (MoU). A list of all the “MoU” concluded by the Organisation is available at Summary table of the different MOUs registered by EXD as of 1st September 2008. This list will be updated once a year by EXD in liaison with the AOs.

4. Technical issues

- Before requesting any third-party copyrighted material, please consult your PAC editor for technical advice on the type of files needed for images, maps, photographs, charts, tables, graphs or artwork. For example, photos should be obtained in full size (100 %), 300 dpi, in EPS or TIFF format.
- Please note that if the quality of the file is not sufficient the element may simply need to be removed from the manuscript.

5. References and Sources

- If mention of Creative Commons licence needs to be made, PAC will need all relevant information in order to include this on the copyright page (p. 2) of the OECD publication. You are responsible to check this page before giving the final approval (Bon à tirer/Bât) of the manuscript for publication.
- General guidelines for References and Sources of graphs can be consulted at http://ocde.p8.siteinternet.com/guideline/article.php3?id_article=634 (e.g. databases titles should be listed in italics in the source field for graphs and tables).
- General guidelines for Bibliographies, References and Sources can be found at http://ocde.p8.siteinternet.com/guideline/rubrique.php3?id_rubrique=107

6. Some tips:

- Anticipate a minimum of two weeks for your permission request. Very often two attempts are necessary to obtain permission.
- Ensure that back-up material is available should permission not be granted, or if you do not receive it in time.

For further advice, please do not hesitate to contact:

For copyright issues:
For technical issues: