<tr>
<td></td>
<td>• Politics – In what areas and how can we think and work more politically in fragile settings?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>• Beyond Aid – How can we better support and encourage conflict-sensitive economic growth, private sector development, and domestic resource mobilisation in fragile settings?</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
• Countering Violent Extremism – Does/should this issue fit amongst our portfolios of longer-term peacebuilding and development work and should we be approaching it the same or differently?

• Partnerships – Delivering effective results in fragile contexts will require engaging in new ways with other actors. How can we encourage common strategic understandings and partnerships, for example, with humanitarian, defence and diplomatic actors, as well as others?

• Sustainable Development Goal 16 – With the task of implementation now ahead of us, what lessons, not only from the New Deal experience but also from decades of working on these issues, should be brought forward as we embark upon this new Agenda?

The four questions are:

• Why is this issue important – what is the specific link to the broader conflict and fragility agenda”?

• How is the issue currently being framed or dealt with by your government?

• What is INCAF’s added value in contributing to the way this issue is currently being framed and/or addressed?

• Are there any gaps in research or knowledge that would facilitate increased attention and commitment to this theme?

For decision: Are these themes the correct ones for INCAF to focus on? How can we best support the way that these issues are approached by our network’s members, the conflict and fragility community more broadly, as well as other partners?

12:45 - 14:00  LUNCH

14:00 - 15:30  5. LOOKING FORWARD: THE INDEPENDENT REVIEW OF THE NEW DEAL AND THE INTERNATIONAL DIALOGUE ON PEACEBUILDING AND STATEBUILDING

This session will provide an overview of key findings thus far from the Independent Review, and allow INCAF members to react to and discuss those key findings, and what they imply for the future of the New Deal and the International Dialogue.

The Independent Review is focusing on four questions:

• What impact has the New Deal had, so far, in shaping global norms and ideas about how to engage in fragile and conflict-affected situation and more generally about peacebuilding and statebuilding?

• Has the New Deal changed the ways development partners and fragile states governments are doing business, and what difference, if any, is this beginning to make in addressing conflict and fragility issues in these contexts?

• What has the contribution of the International Dialogue been to the above, if any?

• What have the main gaps and weaknesses been with the New Deal and International Dialogue, and how could both change to give a renewed boost to the New Deal and make it relevant to recurrent and emerging crises and new forms of fragility?

This session will be about the current refugee situation, its complexity, and links to fragility, as well as its implications for the ways that we are structured to predict, prevent, analyse, cooperate on, deliver and finance our responses to crises such as these.

Guiding questions for discussion include:
- What does a complex crisis such as this mean for the conflict and fragility community?
- What does this situation illustrate about the way we are structured and equipped to respond holistically and cross-sectorally? What would a comprehensive approach look like?
- How can we get better at utilizing the tools at our disposal to address issues such as these before they become full-blown crises?
