

Chapter 1

Transparency and Third Party Participation in Investor-state Dispute Settlement Procedures*

The system of investment dispute settlement has borrowed its main elements from the system of commercial arbitration. However, investor-state disputes often raise public interest issues which are usually absent from international commercial arbitration. As a result, the traditional manner in which governmental measures are reviewed for compliance with international law in a private setting, i.e. confidential in-camera proceedings has come under increased scrutiny and criticism.

This survey examines the current rules related to transparency and third party participation in investor-state dispute settlement procedures, steps taken to improve transparency and the perceived advantages as well as the challenges of additional transparency.

* This survey was prepared by Catherine Yannaca-Small, Investment Division, OECD Directorate for Financial and Enterprise Affairs, and benefited from discussions, comments and a variety of perspectives in the OECD Investment Committee. The document as a factual survey, however, does not necessarily reflect the views of the OECD or those of its member governments. It cannot be construed as prejudging ongoing or future negotiations or disputes pertaining to international investment agreements.

Statement by the Investment Committee

June 2005

There is a general understanding among the members of the Investment Committee that additional transparency, in particular in relation to the publication of arbitral awards, subject to necessary safeguards for the protection of confidential business and governmental information, is desirable to enhance effectiveness and public acceptance of international investment arbitration, as well as contributing to the further development of a public body of jurisprudence. Members of the Investment Committee generally share the view that, especially insofar as proceedings raise important issues of public interest, it may also be desirable to allow third party participation, subject however to clear and specific guidelines.

Introduction

The system of investment dispute settlement has borrowed its main elements from the system of commercial arbitration. However, investor-state disputes often raise public interest issues which are usually absent from international commercial arbitration. As a result, the traditional manner in which governmental measures are reviewed for compliance with international law in a private setting, i.e. confidential in camera proceedings has come under increased scrutiny and criticism.

The present document surveys the issues related to transparency and third party participation in investor-state dispute settlement procedures. Section 1 examines the way in which the current rules apply to these issues. Section 2 describes the steps taken to improve the transparency of the system at the governmental level, by the arbitral Tribunals and the International Centre for the Settlement of Investment Disputes (ICSID). Section 3 examines the perceived advantages as well as the challenges of additional transparency. The last section sums up.

1. Current arbitration rules provide for limited transparency

International arbitration can provide the advantage of impartial and competent decision making. A traditional commercial arbitration, between two private companies for instance, may run its course without public disclosure even of the existence of the dispute. Under the existing rules in this area, hearings are treated as entirely private matters and publication of the resulting award often depends on the decision of one or both parties. There are cases in which published awards are edited to obscure the identity of the parties.¹ The policy of confidentiality serves to expedite arbitrations, as well as to protect the confidentiality of information and reputation. There is no mechanism ensuring that the public will ever know about the claim brought, the positions taken by the parties, the decisions issued by the tribunals and the precise reasons for them. The notion that arbitrators (usually three) decide a purely commercial dispute behind closed doors “does not offend fundamental principles of justice”.² That the same three arbitrators may decide in the same way whether the measures taken by a government – which may raise sensitive issues of public policies³ – are compatible with an investment treaty could be more problematic. Current arbitration procedures provide for varied degrees of transparency.

1.1. Registration of disputes

In treaties such as BITs or Energy Charter, for instance, which do not require investors to publicly manifest their intention to launch a dispute settlement process, public disclosure depends on the arbitral rules chosen by the Parties or the will of the Parties to make such a disclosure where the rules do not control the matter.

When ICSID⁴ is chosen as the arbitration facility, the ICSID Secretariat applies a policy of registering all cases (the register can also be found in its Web site). The register includes the name of the Parties involved in the dispute, the date of registration and a short description of the dispute.

On the other hand, if another institution is chosen (ICC or SCC), there is no publication of registered cases. Since investment disputes account for a small part of the submitted disputes, it is also difficult to have exact knowledge of the existence, the number and general nature of these investment disputes.

Ad hoc (non-institutional) arbitration, for its part, may take place anywhere without any requirement for registration. The most common rules used in an ad hoc arbitration are the UNCITRAL⁵ rules. An increasing number of cases based on UNCITRAL rules are offered nowadays the administrative support of the ICSID Secretariat.

1.2. Access to the proceedings and submissions by non-disputant parties

Confidentiality may also apply to the arbitration proceedings. NAFTA in its Articles 1128 and 1129 provides for access to the documents and submissions on issues of interpretation by non-disputant parties (but only by the two other governments party to NAFTA). These submissions are regularly posted on the Web. Non-disputant private parties have no access to the

3. In the NAFTA context for instance: In SD Myers, Canada was required to pay damages for blocking the export to the US of hazardous waste products; in Metalclad, Mexico did not allow the construction of a toxic waste processing plant by issuing a decree to protect the area in question for environmental reasons; Methanex (a Canadian company) challenges California's decision to ban the use of gasoline additive containing methanol.
4. See worldbank.org/icsid. Two thirds of all cases brought to ICSID since 1966 were filed within the last five years. Fourteen NAFTA proceedings have been brought to ICSID since 1994 and six under the UNCITRAL rules.
5. Although UNCITRAL has a Secretariat, its Secretariat has no mandate to register cases or keep data of the use of its rules by investors.

proceedings unless there is consent of the parties to open or the Tribunal in its discretion opens up the proceedings to amici curiae, i.e. friends of the court. However, new developments are taking place in this regard and some new investment agreements as well as arbitral tribunals provide for interested third parties to participate in the proceedings and submit written submissions related to the case (see Section 2).

1.3. Access to the awards

There is no general binding rule for the publication of awards and they remain generally confidential unless the parties to the dispute agree to disclose them. However, NAFTA's Annex 1137.4 provides for the possibility of making the awards public. This Annex stipulates that if Canada and the US are the disputing Parties, either they (whoever is the disputing party in the specific case) or the disputing investor that is a party to the arbitration may make the award public. If Mexico is the disputing Party, the applicable arbitration rules apply to the publication of an award.

According to the ICSID Convention,⁶ the Centre may publish an award only when both parties give their consent. The ICSID Secretariat encourages the parties to the dispute to make the awards public by posting them on the Web and circulating them through its Foreign Investment Law Journal. Statistically, in about fifty per cent of the cases, ICSID obtains consent of the parties to publish the award. However, when one of the parties does not consent to the publication of the award by ICSID, the other party commonly releases it for publication by such other sources as International Legal Materials, the Journal du Droit International or ICSID Reports. If the Centre does not have the required consent of both parties for publication of the full text of the award and it is not published by another source, ICSID publishes (on its Web site and in the ICSID Review – Foreign Investment Law Journal) excerpts from the legal holdings of the award, pursuant to ICSID Arbitration Rule 48(4). In short, all ICSID arbitral awards, or at least their key legal holdings, are published.

The UNCITRAL rules⁷ provide that an award may be made public “only with the consent of the parties” and the same confidentiality requirements apply under the other institutional rules.

Today, several arbitration institutions, as well as independent publishers, have started to regularly publish arbitral awards. For example the ICC publishes sanitised extracts of awards (the names of the parties as well as relevant details are always omitted) in its regular periodical bulletin.⁸ Such publication of awards is done regularly unless the parties desire otherwise.

7. Article 32(5) of the UNCITRAL Rules.

2. Steps towards additional transparency

The principle of public hearings in judicial proceedings is embodied in national laws. The closed doors approach of investment arbitration on issues of public interest, including the non-publication of awards in many cases, has engendered pressure from the public and interest groups to allow them access not only to the final arbitral award, but also to proceedings similar to those which they would have in national adjudication. Some States – in particular in the context of NAFTA – have taken steps in this direction, reflecting commitments to openness and transparency in dispute settlement procedures. In some cases, the existence of national laws related to freedom of information has brought in new developments which entail lower levels of confidentiality in existing processes. While tribunals' practice is also evolving, ICSID, as the main institutional body administering investment disputes has offered some reflections on improvements on both publication of awards and access of third parties.

2.1. States' interpretations and declarations

In 2001, the NAFTA Free Trade Commission⁹ (FTC) issued an Interpretation clarifying that “nothing in the NAFTA” imposes a general duty of confidentiality precluding the parties from providing public access to documents submitted to or issued by a Chapter Eleven Tribunal, “apart from the limited specific exceptions set forth expressly in the relevant arbitral rules”. In addition, each NAFTA country agreed to make available to the public “in a timely manner”¹⁰ all documents submitted to and issued by Chapter Eleven Tribunals other than confidential business information protected from disclosure under the relevant arbitral and domestic law rules.

The NAFTA FTC issued a second Statement in October 2003 by which it confirmed that no provision of NAFTA limits a Tribunal's discretion to receive submissions from a third non-disputing party. The Statement also set forth guidelines for the procedures to be followed by prospective interested parties.

The NAFTA FTC at its joint statement of 16 July 2004 made a special mention to the progress of the transparency initiatives it had announced in its October 2003 Statement. It also welcomed the fact that Mexico joined the United States and Canada in their support of open hearings in the context of investor-states disputes. (The three NAFTA statements are reproduced in Annex 1).

2.2. International Agreements

Draft Multilateral Agreement on Investment (MAI)

Already in the 1990s, the draft Multilateral Agreement on Investment did not include a limitation in the publication of awards and provided that the award should be a publicly available document. However, appropriate safeguards for the protection of business confidential information were incorporated into the proposed publication criteria (see Annex 2).

New generation of investment agreements: Free Trade Agreements and New Model BITs

Renewed efforts towards a more transparent investment arbitration system are reflected in the investment provisions of the most recent US Free Trade Agreements as well as the new model US Bilateral Investment Treaty and Canada's Foreign Investment Promotion and Protection Agreements (FIPA) Negotiating Programme.

Like NAFTA Article 1128, under the US FTAs with Chile,¹¹ Singapore,¹² Dominican Republic-Central America (DR-CAFTA)¹³ and Morocco,¹⁴ non-disputing State parties to these agreements may make oral and written submissions to the Tribunal on issues of interpretation. The latter FTAs also provide that Tribunals also have the authority to accept and consider written amicus curiae submissions from a person or entity that is not a party to the dispute. In terms of transparency of arbitral proceedings, the main documents¹⁵ related to 12. US-Singapore Free Trade Agreement signed on 6 May 2003, entered into force on 1 January 2004.

13. Dominican Republic-Central America – Free Trade Agreement (DR-CAFTA) signed on 5 August 2004. The countries parties to the Agreement are: Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua and the United States.
14. US-Morocco Free Trade Agreement signed on 15 June, 2004.
15. These documents include:
 - a) the notice of intent;
 - b) the notice of arbitration;
 - c) pleadings, memorials, and briefs submitted to the tribunal by a disputing party and any written submissions;
 - d) minutes or transcripts of hearings of the tribunal, where available; and
 - e) orders, awards, and decisions of the tribunal.

the dispute settlement procedures must be made public and the hearings must be open to the public. However, a safeguard is included for sensitive information which is protected accordingly (see Annex 3 for the relevant provisions).

The same provisions are found in the most recent version of the US Model Bilateral Investment Treaty (Articles 28 and 29).

Canada's new FIPA contains similar provisions. It promotes transparency by providing that "all documents submitted to or issued by the Tribunal, including transcripts of hearings, will be promptly made available to the public, subject to redaction for [...] privileged information". It also provides for all hearings to be open to the public and institutionalises the possibility for the acceptance of written amicus curiae submissions. The provisions in these agreements are compatible with ICSID and UNCITRAL rules which require the consent of both parties; the State parties have conditioned their consent upon transparency and therefore the investor/party to the dispute consents to the transparency provisions by initiating the proceedings pursuant to that agreement. (The relevant provisions of the US and Canada model agreements are reproduced in Annex 4.)

2.3. Arbitral Tribunals

Publication of documents

Loewen case. The first NAFTA Chapter 11 case brought against the United States (Loewen case)¹⁶ required the arbitral tribunal to consider the United States obligation under its domestic law to release documents related to the arbitration proceedings. Indeed, the US Freedom of Information Act (FOIA)¹⁷

16. Loewen Group, Inc. and Raymond Loewen v. United States of America, ICSID Case No. ARB(AF)/98/3 (Award) (26 June 2003). The Loewen Group, Inc. ("TLGI"), a Canadian corporation involved in the death-care industry, and Raymond L. Loewen, its chairman and CEO at the time of the events at issue, had filed claims under the ICSID Additional Facility Rules in their individual capacities and on behalf of Loewen Group International, Inc., TLGI's US subsidiary (collectively "Loewen"). Loewen sought damages for alleged injuries arising out of litigation in which the company was involved in Mississippi state courts in 1995-96. Loewen alleged violations of three provisions of NAFTA – the anti-discrimination principles set forth in Article 1102, the minimum standard of treatment required under Article 1105, and the prohibition against uncompensated expropriation set forth in Article 1110. Loewen requested damages in excess of USD 600 million. On 26 June 2003, the tribunal dismissed the claims against the United States in their entirety.

17. At present, some 50 countries, including developing countries, have passed laws equivalent to FOIA and more have laws either in the drafting stage or with legislatures; see www.freedominfo.org. Margrete Stevens, "The Right to Information and Investor-State Disputes: the Development of a New Procedural Framework in NAFTA Chapter 11 Arbitrations", Presentation in the Conference "International Economic Disputes-A Wider Perspective" St John's College, Cambridge, 1-3 April 2004.

provides that any person has a right of access to federal agency records subject only to some specific exemptions. This right is enforceable in court. The Loewen Tribunal considered the United States request to release the documents and decided that there were no implied rules under the ICSID Additional Facility Rules and no general obligation of confidentiality in NAFTA arbitrations.¹⁸ In addition, based on the Loewen Group's request for clarification of this decision, the tribunal noted that neither of its decisions was intended to affect any statutory obligation of disclosure by which any party might be bound.¹⁹ Following these decisions, the United States, complying with the FOIA, gradually released documents related to the case.

Amici Curiae submissions and open hearings

Two NAFTA Tribunals concluded in principle that they have the authority to accept amici curiae briefs: the Methanex and the UPS Tribunals. Open hearings were also allowed in these two cases and in a recent third case, Canfor v. United States of America.

Methanex case. The second NAFTA case against the United States was brought by a Canadian investor, Methanex.²⁰ In this case, the Parties agreed that orders, pleadings and awards could be made public by either side. A few months later, the Methanex Tribunal took a decision on public participation that is of groundbreaking relevance to UNCITRAL arbitrations, if not to all future investor-state arbitrations.²¹

18. Idem.

19. Idem.

20. This case concerns a USD 1 billion claim against the United States by a Canadian company, a major producer of methanol, a key component of a gasoline additive called MTBE. Methanex launched an international arbitration in response to the March 1999 order by the state of California to ban the use of MTBE by the end of 2002 because the additive was contaminating drinking water supplies, and was therefore posing a significant risk to human health and safety, and the environment. Methanex argues that the ineffective regulation and non-enforcement of domestic environmental laws including the US Clean Water Act, is responsible for the presence of MTBE in California water supplies. It argues that the planned ban is tantamount to an expropriation of the company's investment: a violation of NAFTA's Article 1110 and was enacted in breach of the national treatment (Article 1102) and minimum international standards of treatment (Article 1105) provisions.

21. Methanex Corporation v. United States of America, Decision of the Tribunal on Petitions from Third Persons to intervene as "amici curiae", 15 January 2001. The petitions and all the documents relevant to this case can be found on www.state.gov/s/l/c5818.htm.

The public participation issue was first raised in August 2000 through a “Petition”, seeking amicus curiae status²² for the International Institute for Sustainable Development (IISD).²³ This was followed in September by a submission from Earthjustice,²⁴ a US legal NGO, on behalf of other California-based environmental groups. The two NGOs were seeking the following results:

- i) permission to make written submissions in the case
- ii) an order for the hearings to be made open to the public;
- iii) an order of disclosure to IISD of all documents for purposes of making the submissions;
- iv) an order allowing for oral arguments to be made.

In its decision, the Tribunal accepted the first three requests but did not allow for oral arguments to be made by amici.

In an important part of its reasons to allow amici curiae submissions, the Tribunal noted the large distinction between the substantive issues at stake in the arbitration before it as compared to traditional commercial arbitration. It stated that the present type of issues:

“... extend far beyond those raised by the usual transnational arbitration between commercial parties [...] the public interest in this arbitration arises from its subject-matter, as powerfully suggested in the Petitions.”²⁵

At the same time, Canada and the United States recognised in their submissions that the closed nature of Chapter 11 proceedings was damaging to the public credibility of the process itself.

The Methanex Tribunal issued a press release on 30 January 2004 indicating its decision to allow NGOs or other interested non-parties to apply to make submissions. In March 2004, the IISD and Earthjustice submitted their briefs to the Tribunal. Open hearings, broadcast live, took place in the World Bank headquarters on 7-17 June 2004.

Canadians²⁸ made a case about having a direct interest in the subject matter of the claim and in the broader public policy implications of the dispute.²⁹ In addition, they noted their interest in addressing the lack of transparency that has historically attended international arbitral processes and based their request on Article 15(1)³⁰ of the UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules which gives discretion to the arbitral tribunal to conduct the arbitration in a manner it finds appropriate. They petitioned the Tribunal requesting:³¹

- i) standing as parties to any proceedings related to the case;
- ii) in case of denial, the right to intervene as amici curiae in such proceedings to be accorded on terms that are consistent with the principles of fairness, equality and fundamental justice;
- iii) disclosure of the main documents³² related to the proceedings;
- iv) the right to make submissions concerning the place of arbitration;
- v) the right to make submissions concerning the jurisdiction of this Tribunal, and once they are fully known the arbitrability of the matters the disputing investor has raised; and
- vi) an opportunity to amend the Petition as further details of the claim become known to the petitioners.

28. The Council of Canadians, founded in 1985, is a non-governmental organisation with more than 100 000 members which lobbies members of parliament, conducts research and runs national programmes related to the future of Canada's social programmes, the protection of public health and the environment and the functioning of public institutions.
29. UPS claims that Canada Post, which UPS alleges is a letter mail monopoly, engages in anti-competitive practices: in providing its non-monopoly courier and parcel services (Express post and Priority Courier), it, allegedly, unfairly uses its postal monopoly infrastructure to reduce the costs of delivering its non-monopoly services. UPS alleges that Canada has breached its obligations under the NAFTA 1) to supervise a "government monopoly" and "state entity" [Arts. 1502(3)(a) and 1503(2)]; 2) to accord treatment no less favourable than it accords, in like circumstances, to its own investors (Article 1102); and 3) to accord treatment in accordance with international law (Article 1105). UPS seeks USD 160 million in damages.
30. Article 15(1) of the UNCITRAL Rules provides: "Subject to these Rules the arbitral tribunal may conduct the arbitration in such a manner as it considers appropriate, provided that the parties are treated with equality and that at any stage of the proceedings each party is given a full opportunity of presenting his case."
31. See op. cit., No. 29, par. 1.
32. Disclosure of the statement of claim and defence, memorials, counter-memorials, pre-hearing memoranda, witness statements and expert reports, including appendices and exhibits to such submissions, and any applications or motions to the Tribunal.

Canada and the US supported in their submissions the view that the Tribunal is authorised to accept written submissions from third parties as amici curiæ, while Mexico disagreed.³³

The Tribunal considered that it was indeed within the scope of article 15(1) of the UNCITRAL rules to receive submissions offered by the third parties with the purpose of assisting the Tribunal in that process and found that it had power to accept such written amicus briefs from the Petitioners. In its decision it also recalled “the emphasis placed on the value of greater transparency for proceedings such as these. Such proceedings are not now, if they ever were, to be equated to the standard run of international commercial arbitration between private parties”.³⁴

In addition, both parties agreed to make publicly available, subject to the protection of confidential information: “pleadings, and submissions of any disputing party or NAFTA Party, together with their appendices and attached exhibits, including the note of intent, notice of arbitration, amended statement of claim, statement of defense, memorials, affidavits, responses to tribunal questions, transcripts of public hearings, correspondence to or from the Tribunal, and any awards, including procedural orders, rulings, preliminary and final awards.”

Parties to the dispute also agreed to make the hearings open to the public, subject to the protection of confidential information. The public hearings, broadcast live, took place in the World Bank headquarters on 29-31 July 2002.³⁵

Canfor v. United States of America. In Canfor v. United States of America case,³⁶ the arbitral tribunal allowed and parties to the dispute agreed to make the hearings open to the public. The public hearings, broadcast live, were held on 7-9 December 2004 in the World Bank headquarters.

The US Department of Commerce issued final antidumping and countervailing duty determinations on softwood lumber in March 2002. In May 2002, the US International Trade Commission issued a final determination that the US softwood lumber industry was threatened with material injury by reason of imports from Canada of softwood lumber. As a result of those determinations, a Canfor subsidiary is required to pay increased duties on softwood lumber products imported to the United States. Canfor's notice alleges that the United States, by virtue of these determinations, has breached NAFTA Chapter Eleven by not according it national treatment (Art. 1102) or most-favoured-nation treatment (Art. 1103); by not according it treatment in accordance with international law (Art. 1105); and by expropriating its investment without compensation (Art. 1110). The notice claims damages of not less than USD 250 million.

In the Aguas Argentinas, S.A., Suez, Sociedad General de Aguas de Barcelona, S.A. and Vivendi Universal, S.A., v. the Argentine Republic case, it was the first time a Tribunal in an ICSID Convention case under a BIT, ruled that it had the power to entertain legal arguments from interested non-parties.³⁷

On 28 January 2005, five non-governmental organisations, Asociación Civil por la Igualdad y la Justicia (ACIJ), Centro de Estudios Legales y Sociales (CELS), Center for International Environmental Law (CIEL), Consumidores Libres Cooperativa Ltda. de Provisión de Servicios de Acción Comunitaria, and Unión de Usuarios y Consumidores, filed a “Petition for Transparency and Participation as Amicus Curiae” in the above ICSID case. Asserting that the case involved matters of public interest and the fundamental rights of people living in the area affected by the dispute in the case, the petitioners requested the Tribunal to grant three requests

- i) to allow them access to the hearings;³⁸
- ii) to allow them the opportunity to present legal arguments as amicus curiae;³⁹ and
- iii) to allow them timely, sufficient, and unrestricted access to all of the documents in the case.⁴⁰

38. The Petitioners cited the NAFTA cases of Methanex v. United States of America and UPS v. Canada. By “access to hearings” they did not only request the right to attend hearings but also to be given the opportunity to make oral presentations to the Tribunal, asserting the “right of every person to participate and make their voices heard in cases where decisions may affect their rights”. Idem, par. 4.

39. The Tribunal noted that the Petitioners did not define in detail the role and nature of an amicus curiae or “friend of the court” but it assumed that “the amicus curiae role the Petitioners seek to play [...] is similar to that of a friend to the court recognised in certain legal systems and more recently in a number of international proceedings. In such cases, a non-party to the dispute, as a ‘friend’, offers to provide the court or tribunal its special perspectives, arguments, or expertise on the dispute, usually in the form of a written amicus curiae brief or submission”. Idem, par. 8.

40. Petitioners requested the Tribunal “[...] to concede [...] timely, sufficient, and unrestricted access to the documents of the arbitration, namely the parties submissions, transcripts of hearings, statements of witnesses and experts, and any other documents produced in this arbitration”. Idem, par. 30.

The Tribunal rejected the first request to have the arbitral hearings open to the public founding its decision on the ICSID Rule 32(2) which requires the consent of the parties.⁴¹ Noting that while in the previous cases under NAFTA – Methanex and UPS – the Tribunals allowed open hearings, this was done with the consent of both parties, which was a missing element in the present case. It stated that:

*“Although the Tribunal [...] does have certain inherent powers with respect to arbitral procedure, it has no authority to exercise such power in opposition to a clear directive in the Arbitration Rules, which both Claimants and Respondents have agreed will govern the procedure in this case.”*⁴²

On the question of allowing the submission of amicus curiæ briefs, the Tribunal responded in the affirmative. Although the Claimant argued against such a submission, the Tribunal founded its decision on Article 44 of the ICSID Convention⁴³ and unanimously concluded that the Convention grants it the power to admit amicus curiæ submissions from suitable non-parties in appropriate cases. It found further support for this decision in international arbitration proceedings in the practices of NAFTA, the Iran-US Claims Tribunal and the WTO. It then stated that:

*“The exercise of the power conferred on the Tribunal by Article 44 to accept amicus submissions should depend on three basic criteria: a) the appropriateness of the subject matter of the case; b) the suitability of a given non-party to act as amicus curiæ in that case; and c) the procedure by which the amicus submission is made and considered.”*⁴⁴

On the first point, the Tribunal unanimously concluded that the case was an appropriate one in which non-parties may make amicus curiæ submissions since it involved “matters of public interest of such a nature that have traditionally led courts and other tribunals to receive amicus submissions from suitable non-parties”.⁴⁵ It added that:

“The acceptance of amicus submissions would have the additional desirable consequence of increasing the transparency of investor-state arbitration. Public acceptance of the legitimacy of international arbitral process, particularly when they involve states and matters of public interest, is strengthened by increased openness and increased knowledge as to how these processes function [...] Through the participation of appropriate representatives of civil society in appropriate cases, the public will gain increased understanding of ICSID processes.”⁴⁶

The Tribunal chose to set out a procedure whereby interested interveners will need to petition the tribunal for leave to make such submissions. As part of this screening process, the Tribunal will assess the bona fide and expertise of the amici and determine whether they should be given leave to submit legal briefs in the case.⁴⁷

Finally, the Tribunal deferred the decision on the request that all documentation related to the case be disclosed to the public. Observing that the ICISD Convention, Rules and the practice of the Centre present certain constraints, the Tribunal elected to wait to address the request “until such a time as it may grant leave to a particular non-disputing party to file an amicus curiae brief”.⁴⁸

2.4. ICSID Secretariat proposal

In 2004, ICSID Secretariat presented draft proposals on possible improvements of the framework for ICSID arbitration, including in relation to transparency and third party participation.⁴⁹ Following comments received by various interested constituencies, amendments to these draft proposals were presented in May 2005 (see Annex 5).

As mentioned above, the main legal holdings of all ICSID arbitral awards are now published. An important consideration is, however, the timeliness of publication when many cases involving similar issues are pending. It is not until several months have passed that ICSID receives the consent of both parties for it to publish an award. In the meantime, ICSID might publish excerpts of the main holdings, while it awaits the consents for publication of the full text. ICSID Secretariat proposes to amend Arbitration Rule 48(4) and

47. The information required by the Tribunal should include (idem, par. 25):

- a. The identity and background of the petitioner, the nature of its membership if it is an organisation, and the nature of its relationships, if any, to the parties in the dispute;
- b. The nature of the petitioner’s interest in the case.;
- c. Whether the petitioner has received financial or other material support from any of the parties or from any person connected with the parties in this case.;
- d. The reasons why the Tribunal should accept petitioner’s amicus curiae brief.”

the corresponding provision of the Additional Facility Arbitration Rules, Article 53(3) to make it mandatory for ICSID to publish promptly the excerpts of the legal conclusions or the Tribunal.

As for the acceptance of submissions from third parties, ICSID Secretariat proposes by amendments of ICSID Arbitration Rule 37 and Article 41 of the Additional Facility Arbitration Rules regarding evidence, that tribunals would have the authority, after consulting both parties as far as possible, to accept and consider submissions from third parties. The amendments set out conditions for the submissions – for example, the demonstration by the non-disputing party that its submission brings a particular knowledge or insight, addresses a matter within the scope of the dispute and that the non-disputing party has a significant interest in the proceedings.

According to the ICSID and Additional Facility Arbitration Rules, the tribunal may allow other persons to attend the hearings only “with the consent of the parties”.⁵⁰ Hearings open to the public have been consented to by the parties in two cases administered by ICSID under the UNCITRAL Rules. ICSID Secretariat proposes that Arbitration Rule 32(2) and Article 39(2) of the Additional Facility Arbitration Rules be amended so that the consent of both parties would no longer be obligatory for decisions of the tribunal to permit additional categories of persons to attend the hearings or even to open them to the public. According to the ICSID draft proposal, after consultation with the Secretary General and with the parties as far as possible, the Tribunal may allow other persons to attend or observe all or part of the hearings by establishing procedures for the protection of proprietary information and the making of appropriate logistical arrangements.

3. Perceived advantages and challenges of additional transparency

This section examines the case for additional transparency as well as the need for careful consideration of its modalities, based on the results of stakeholder consultations held in OECD, ICSID and other fora.

3.1 Publication of awards

Investment arbitral awards may have a significant impact on the State's future conduct, the national budget and the welfare of the people, so the public interest in investment disputes is understandable. Increased transparency can contribute to enhancing effectiveness and continued acceptance of the system of investment arbitration.

There are a growing number of arbitration awards which are likely to influence future cases and this has argued for their systematic and quick publication. This is considered to enhance the equality of the parties, since today some parties and their representatives do not have the same knowledge of and access to the most recent and yet unpublished opinions. The publication of arbitral awards would contribute to the further development of a public body of jurisprudence which would allow investors and host states to understand how investment agreements are interpreted and applied and ultimately contribute to a more predictable and consistent system. States reading an award are also free to consider whether there is anything in the award that needs to be taken into account in their future negotiations.

At the same time, it is understood that any publication of awards should take into account the protection of confidential business and governmental information. The business community has made known its expectation that full clarity would be provided about which parts of the arbitration proceedings would be covered by extended transparency requirements under a reformed ICSID framework. There is also a view that the consent of the parties for the publication of the award should be requested at the close of the oral proceedings, rather than after the award is rendered. In this case however, this would mean that the parties may be willing to consent to the publication of the award before they know the outcome.

In addition to any possible changes of the ICSID Rules and in order to have increasing transparency, the question has been raised as to whether it might also be necessary to include or modify language in the Bilateral Investment Treaties involving as many countries as possible. Some consider a consistent practice defensible on a case-by-case basis preferable than any new rules on this matter. It has also been suggested that a common approach among treaty partners would be preferable to having dispersed provisions, as this would also ensure that arbitration awards may be published under the other applicable arbitration rules, e.g. UNCITRAL, ICC, SCC or ad hoc. There is also a view that when the institutional rules, such as the ICC for example, require confidentiality, the institutional rules should prevail.

3.2. Third Party Participation

The issues of allowing third party submissions and access to hearings, require a more qualified approach. Although in principle there is merit in allowing interested parties to provide submissions and also allow open hearings, a widely-held view is that it would be preferable that third party participation be subject to specific rules and guidelines and close monitoring based on the following considerations:

- It is important to have a threshold showing of substantive and legitimate interest by the third parties and also have them demonstrate that they are accountable, professional and transparent themselves by disclosing the origin of the funds with which they operate.⁵¹

- Ensure that they are independent and not backed by any of the disputing parties.
- Ensure that the terms of their participation do not enable them to either dictate the outcome or change the rules in the middle of the case.
- Avoid giving non-governmental organisations a higher standing than the non-disputing governments; allow them to submit amicus briefs but not to call witnesses, nor to have the possibility to amend the claims or independently affect the process.
- Transparency in the proceedings could be enhanced by having at least part of the hearings held in the country or area where the problem has arisen.

There is an important linkage between third party participation and access to all documents related to the dispute, including notices of intent and arbitration, pleadings, memorials and briefs if third party submissions are required to demonstrate a substantive interest and address all matters within the scope of the dispute. At present, several countries⁵² allow for access to such documents, subject to safeguards for the protection of confidential information. As mentioned above, examples of such access linked to amici curiae submissions and/or open hearings are the three NAFTA cases (Methanex, UPS and Canfor) and one BIT case (Aguas Argentinas, S.A., Suez, Sociedad General de Aguas de Barcelona, S.A. and Vivendi Universal, S.A.). For international investment agreements that do not provide for third party participation including access to documents and open hearings, tribunals will continue to deal with requests for access on an ad hoc basis, respecting the intent of the parties.

4. Summing up

Investment arbitration and in particular investor/state, has borrowed its main elements from commercial arbitration. Whether confidentiality at all stages – from the registration of the dispute to the publication of awards – should be applied for matters of general public interest found in investment arbitration has been questioned.

51. In a recent WTO case, the WTO Tribunal refused to consider an amicus brief which made public certain information ordered by the WTO to be kept confidential. The Tribunal found that this was not appropriate behaviour for a “friend of the tribunal”.

52. These countries include: the NAFTA countries, based on the Free Trade Commission’s Interpretation of 2001; Canada and the United States based on their model BITs and Chile, Singapore, Dominican Republic-Central America and Morocco, based on their FTAs with the United States.

Public interest groups have been advocating more transparency and participation in the proceedings in order to enhance the acceptability and credibility of arbitral decisions. A few governments, committed to openness and transparency – often called for by their freedom of information acts – are publishing the arbitration proceedings and awards and are inserting relevant provisions in their new model investment agreements. ICSID is proposing to modify its rules in order to take into account these new developments. Finally, breakthrough developments occurred recently with four tribunals' decisions to allow interested parties to submit briefs and/or to allow for open hearings.

Although there is support among governments for the publication of arbitral awards subject to necessary safeguards for the protection of confidential business and governmental information, there is a more qualified reaction to third party participation including public access to other documents submitted to or issued by a tribunal. Monitoring as well as specific rules and guidelines are considered by many members important to guide third party participation either in the form of amici curiæ submissions or open hearings.

ANNEX 1.A1

NAFTA Free Trade Commission's Interpretations and Statements

1. Access to documents (31 July 2001)

Having reviewed the operation of proceedings conducted under Chapter Eleven of the North American Free Trade Agreement, the Free Trade Commission hereby adopts the following interpretations of Chapter Eleven in order to clarify and reaffirm the meaning of certain of its provisions:

A. Access to documents

1. Nothing in the NAFTA imposes a general duty of confidentiality on the disputing parties to a Chapter Eleven arbitration, and, subject to the application of Article 1137(4), nothing in the NAFTA precludes the Parties from providing public access to documents submitted to, or issued by, a Chapter Eleven tribunal.
2. In the application of the foregoing:
 - a) In accordance with Article 1120(2), the NAFTA Parties agree that nothing in the relevant arbitral rules imposes a general duty of confidentiality or precludes the Parties from providing public access to documents submitted to, or issued by, Chapter Eleven tribunals, apart from the limited specific exceptions set forth expressly in those rules.
 - b) Each Party agrees to make available to the public in a timely manner all documents submitted to, or issued by, a Chapter Eleven tribunal, subject to redaction of:
 - i) business information;
 - ii) information which is privileged or otherwise protected from disclosure under the Party's domestic law; and
 - iii) information which the Party must withhold pursuant to the relevant arbitral rules, as applied.

- c) The Parties reaffirm that disputing parties may disclose to other persons in connection with the arbitral proceedings such unredacted documents as they consider necessary for the preparation of their cases, but they shall ensure that those persons protect the confidential information in such documents.
 - d) The Parties further reaffirm that the Governments of Canada, the United Mexican States and the United States of America may share with officials of their respective federal, state or provincial governments all relevant documents in the course of dispute settlement under Chapter Eleven of NAFTA, including confidential information.
3. The Parties confirm that nothing in this interpretation shall be construed to require any Party to furnish or allow access to information that it may withhold in accordance with Articles 2102 or 2105.

2. Statement of the Free Trade Commission on non-disputing party participation (October 2003)

A. Non-disputing party participation

1. No provision of the North American Free Trade Agreement (“NAFTA”) limits a Tribunal’s discretion to accept written submissions from a person or entity that is not a disputing party (a “non-disputing party”).
2. Nothing in this statement by the Free Trade Commission (“the FTC”) prejudices the rights of NAFTA Parties under Article 1128 of the NAFTA.
3. Considering that written submissions by non-disputing parties in arbitrations under Section B of Chapter 11 of NAFTA may affect the operation of the Chapter, and in the interests of fairness and the orderly conduct of arbitrations under Chapter 11, the FTC recommends that Chapter 11 Tribunals adopt the following procedures with respect to such submissions.

B. Procedures

1. Any non-disputing party that is a person of a Party, or that has a significant presence in the territory of a Party, that wishes to file a written submission with the Tribunal (the “applicant”) will apply for leave from the Tribunal to file such a submission. The applicant will attach the submission to the application.
2. The application for leave to file a non-disputing party submission will:
 - a) be made in writing, dated and signed by the person filing the application, and include the address and other contact details of the applicant;
 - b) be no longer than 5 typed pages;

- c) describe the applicant, including, where relevant, its membership and legal status (e.g., company, trade association or other non-governmental organisation), its general objectives, the nature of its activities, and any parent organisation (including any organisation that directly or indirectly controls the applicant);
 - d) disclose whether or not the applicant has any affiliation, direct or indirect, with any disputing party;
 - e) identify any government, person or organisation that has provided any financial or other assistance in preparing the submission;
 - f) specify the nature of the interest that the applicant has in the arbitration;
 - g) identify the specific issues of fact or law in the arbitration that the applicant has addressed in its written submission;
 - h) explain, by reference to the factors specified in paragraph 6, why the Tribunal should accept the submission; and
 - i) be made in a language of the arbitration.
3. The submission filed by a non-disputing party will:
- a) be dated and signed by the person filing the submission;
 - b) be concise, and in no case longer than 20 typed pages, including any appendices;
 - c) set out a precise statement supporting the applicant's position on the issues; and
 - d) only address matters within the scope of the dispute.
4. The application for leave to file a non-disputing party submission and the submission will be served on all disputing parties and the Tribunal.
5. The Tribunal will set an appropriate date by which the disputing parties may comment on the application for leave to file a non-disputing party submission.
6. In determining whether to grant leave to file a non-disputing party submission, the Tribunal will consider, among other things, the extent to which:
- a) the non-disputing party submission would assist the Tribunal in the determination of a factual or legal issue related to the arbitration by bringing a perspective, particular knowledge or insight that is different from that of the disputing parties;
 - b) the non-disputing party submission would address matters within the scope of the dispute;
 - c) the non-disputing party has a significant interest in the arbitration; and

- d) there is a public interest in the subject-matter of the arbitration.
7. The Tribunal will ensure that:
 - a) any non-disputing party submission avoids disrupting the proceedings; and
 - b) neither disputing party is unduly burdened or unfairly prejudiced by such submissions.
8. The Tribunal will render a decision on whether to grant leave to file a non-disputing party submission. If leave to file a non-disputing party submission is granted, the Tribunal will set an appropriate date by which the disputing parties may respond in writing to the non-disputing party submission. By that date, non-disputing NAFTA Party, pursuant to Article 1128, address any issues of interpretation of the Agreement presented in the non-disputing party submission.
9. The granting of leave to file a non-disputing party submission does not require the Tribunal to address that submission at any point in the arbitration. The granting of leave to file a non-disputing party submission does not entitle the non-disputing party that filed the submission to make further submissions in the arbitration.
10. Access to documents by non-disputing parties that file applications under these procedures will be governed by the FTC's Note of 31 July 2001.

3. NAFTA Free Trade Commission Joint Statement on the Decade of achievement (San Antonio, 16 July 2004)

"[...] We are pleased that the transparency initiatives we took during our October 2003 meeting have already begun to improve the operation of the investment chapter investor-state dispute-settlement mechanism. Earlier this year, for the first time a tribunal accepted written submissions from a non-disputing party and adopted the procedures that we recommended following our 7 October 2003 meeting in Montreal, for the handling of such submissions.

We were pleased Mexico has now joined Canada and the United States in supporting open hearings for investor-state disputes. In addition, we have agreed that the same degree of openness should apply to proceedings under the Dispute Settlement provisions of Chapter 20 of the NAFTA, and asked officials to develop rules governing open hearings for such proceedings [...]"

7. As provided under Article 10(4) and (5), the Tribunal shall not require a Party to furnish or allow access to information the disclosure of which would impede law enforcement or would be contrary to the Party's law protecting Cabinet confidences, personal privacy or the financial affairs and accounts of individual customers of financial institutions, or which it determines to be contrary to its essential security.
8. To the extent that a Tribunal's confidentiality order designates information as confidential and a Party's law on access to information requires public access to that information, the Party's law on access to information shall prevail. However, a Party should endeavour to apply its law on access to information so as to protect information designated confidential by the Tribunal.

Article 39. Submissions by a Non-Disputing Party

1. Any non-disputing party that is a person of a Party, or has a significant presence in the territory of a Party, that wishes to file a written submission with a Tribunal (the “applicant”) shall apply for leave from the Tribunal to file such a submission, in accordance with Annex C.39. The applicant shall attach the submission to the application.

2. The applicant shall serve the application for leave to file a non-disputing party submission and the submission on all disputing parties and the Tribunal.
3. The Tribunal shall set an appropriate date for the disputing parties to comment on the application for leave to file a non-disputing party submission.
4. In determining whether to grant leave to file a non-disputing party submission, the Tribunal shall consider, among other things, the extent to which:
 - a) the non-disputing party submission would assist the Tribunal in the determination of a factual or legal issue related to the arbitration by bringing a perspective, particular knowledge or insight that is different from that of the disputing parties;
 - b) the non-disputing party submission would address a matter within the scope of the dispute;
 - c) the non-disputing party has a significant interest in the arbitration; and
 - d) there is a public interest in the subject-matter of the arbitration.
5. The Tribunal shall ensure that:
 - a) any non-disputing party submission does not disrupt the proceedings; and
 - b) neither disputing party is unduly burdened or unfairly prejudiced by such submissions.
6. The Tribunal shall decide whether to grant leave to file a non-disputing party submission. If leave to file a non-disputing party submission is granted, the Tribunal shall set an appropriate date for the disputing parties to respond in writing to the non-disputing party submission. By that date, the non-disputing Party may, pursuant to Article 34 (Participation by the Non-Disputing Party), address any issues of interpretation of this Agreement presented in the non-disputing party submission.
7. The Tribunal that grants leave to file a non-disputing party submission is not required to address the submission at any point in the arbitration, nor is the non-disputing party that files the submission entitled to make further submissions in the arbitration.
8. Access to hearings and documents by non-disputing parties that file applications under these procedures shall be governed by the provisions pertaining to public access to hearings and documents under Article 38 (Public Access to Hearings and Documents).

ANNEX 1.A5

Suggested Changes to the ICSID Rules and Regulations

Working Paper of the ICSID Secretariat

12 May 2005

Publication of Awards – Suggested changes to ICSID Arbitration Rule 48

Rule 48 – Rendering of the Award

4. The Centre shall not publish the award without the consent of the parties. The Centre may shall, however, promptly include in its publications excerpts of the legal rules applied by conclusions of the Tribunal.

Note: As stated in the Discussion Paper of 22 October 2004, Article 48(5) of the ICSID Convention and the first sentence of Arbitration Rule 48(4) preclude the Centre from publishing a Convention award without the consent of the parties. However, the Centre may publish excerpts from the legal holdings of the award.

The suggested changes would facilitate the prompt release of excerpts, by making their early publication mandatory, and clarify the wording of the provision. Prompt publication of the excerpts is particularly important in view of the increase in the number of pending cases at the Centre.

Similar changes would be made to the corresponding provisions in the Additional Facility Arbitration Rules, Article 53(3).

Access of Third Parties – Suggested changes to ICSID Arbitration Rule 32

Rule 32 – The Oral Procedure

2. After consultation with the Secretary-General and with the parties as far as possible, the Tribunal shall decide, with the consent of the parties, which may allow other persons, besides the parties, their agents, counsel and advocates, witnesses and experts during their testimony, and officers of the Tribunal may, to attend or observe all or part of the hearings. The Tribunal shall for such cases establish procedures for the protection of proprietary information and the making of appropriate logistical arrangements.

Note: In certain cases, it could be useful to have hearings open to persons other than those directly involved in the proceeding. The suggested changes would make clear that this might be considered by a tribunal after consultation with the Secretary-General and both parties as far as possible. Such consultation with the parties would ensure that any objection or concern they may have will be taken into account by the tribunal in considering whether to allow any third parties to attend or observe the hearings. The changes would also require the tribunal for such cases to prescribe procedures to protect proprietary information and make the appropriate logistical arrangements.

Similar changes would be made to the corresponding provisions in the Additional Facility Arbitration Rules, Article 39(2).

Access of Third Parties – Suggested changes to ICSID Arbitration Rule 37

Rule 37 – Visits and Inquiries; Submissions of Non-disputing Parties

1. If the Tribunal considers it necessary to visit any place connected with the dispute or to conduct an inquiry there, it shall make an order to this effect. The order shall define the scope of the visit or the subject of the inquiry, the time limit, the procedure to be followed and other particulars. The parties may participate in any visit or inquiry.
2. After consulting both parties as far as possible, the Tribunal may allow a person or a State that is not a party to the dispute (hereafter called the “non-disputing party”) to file a written submission with the Tribunal. In determining whether to allow such a filing, the Tribunal shall consider, among others things, the extent to which:

- a) the non-disputing party submission would assist the Tribunal in the determination of a factual or legal issue related to the proceeding by bringing a perspective, particular knowledge or insight that is different from that of the disputing parties;
- b) the non-disputing party submission would address a matter within the scope of the dispute;
- c) the non-disputing party has a significant interest in the proceeding. The Tribunal shall ensure that the non-disputing party submission does not disrupt the proceeding, unduly burden or unfairly prejudice either party, and that both parties are given an opportunity of presenting their observations on the non-disputing party submission.

Note: The suggested changes would make clear that ICSID tribunals may accept and consider written submissions from a non-disputing person or a State, after consulting both parties as far as possible. The tribunal would have to be satisfied that any such submissions would assist the tribunal in the determination of a factual or legal issue within the scope of the dispute, that the non-disputing party has a significant interest in the dispute and that this would not disrupt the proceeding or unfairly burden either party.

Similar changes would be made to the Additional Facility Arbitration Rules, by introducing a new paragraph to Article 41.
