

« Identifying and mobilising migrants' skills for development »

5 October 2012

*OECD Conference Centre, Room CC5
2 Rue André Pascal, Paris, 16th district*

Objectives of the Conference

This conference fits into the framework of the preparations for the upcoming Global Forum on Migration and Development (GFMD), which will be held in Mauritius in November 2012, and more particularly into the framework of round table 1.2 on “Supporting Migrants and Diaspora as Agents of Socioeconomic Change”, which is co-chaired by France.

The conference aims to present the conclusions of two studies undertaken by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) with France's support on the profiles of migrant populations residing in OECD countries and on policies to mobilise migrant skills for development. This presentation will be followed by a debate centred on two round tables, in which representatives of institutions from countries of origin and destination, of migrant associations, of non-governmental organisations and international organisations involved in these matters will participate.

The conference is organised on the basis of the observation that immigrant populations are increasingly qualified but that their diverse skills are not necessarily known, used or mobilised to their full potential.

A first challenge stems from the difficulty of identifying and locating the skills of migrants who could contribute to the development of both their country of destination and their country of origin. The gap in between supply and demand in terms of qualifications also limits migrants' contribution. Mobilising and exploiting the skills of migrants and diaspora for development thus requires first the establishment of a detailed profile of their skills but also the identification of channels through which they can allocate productive potential or promote the transfer of standards, knowledge and expertise to countries of destination and origin.

Many institutional and non-governmental actors are active in these fields and a great deal of experience has been built up in various regions of the world. One of the main goals of this conference is to discuss the basis of these experiences and study means to enhance coordination between the different actors in order to better utilise the skills of migrants to benefit their countries of origin and destination as well as the migrants themselves.

Expected outcomes

- ✓ Sharing of knowledge and experiences on the potential for mobilising migrant and diaspora skills to support development in countries of destination and origin.
- ✓ Raising the awareness of actors involved in the "migrants and development" theme and mobilising them ahead of the next major steps of global migration governance.
- ✓ Identifying new initiatives to promote the mobilisation of migrant and diaspora skills for development.
