PF2.3: Additional leave entitlements for working parents

Definitions and methodology

In addition to leave entitlements around childbirth (PF2.1), working parents are often entitled to further days of leave to help them balance their work and family commitments. This indicator presents information on two types of statutory leave arrangement: annual leave, and leave to provide care for sick or ill family members:

- Annual leave covers both statutory paid annual leave entitlements and public holidays. Public holidays are observed on set dates, while statutory annual leave can generally be taken at the choice of the employee (albeit with the exact timing of the leave often made in agreement with the employer). In some countries, statutory annual leave entitlements are frequently lower than what is set by collective agreement. Information on collectively agreed annual leave is not available for all countries but, where available, data on the average length of collectively agreed annual leave is shown alongside the statutory entitlement for comparison purposes.
- Leave entitlements to care for sick or ill family members are entitlements to leave, sometimes paid, for employees with a child, partner, parent or other family member who is in need of care because of illness. In many cases these provisions are included within wider entitlements to leave for 'personal' or 'family' reasons, with only those provisions that are to be used to care for a sick or ill family member included here. Specific entitlements relating to a permanently disabled child or family member are generally not (comprehensively) covered, unless it is part of the same entitlement as that for employees with a sick or ill family member. Entitlements regarding leave to care for children concern provisions over and above parental and childcare leaves (see PF2.1). Generally, information refers to legislated statutory entitlements only. Arrangements provided by individual employers or by collective agreement in addition to what is stipulated by law are, for the most part, not covered.

Key findings

Most OECD and EU countries provide employees with a statutory minimum annual leave entitlement (Table PF2.3.A). The exact length of the statutory minimum varies from country to country, but in most countries employees are entitled to at least 20 working days per year. Taking into account public holidays, this means that workers in many OECD countries, especially those in Europe, are entitled to at least 30-35 days of leave annually. The US is the only OECD country that does not provide a statutory minimum annual leave entitlement, at the federal level at least. In Japan and Korea, the relatively high number of public holidays ensures that the overall number of holiday days is broadly comparable with practice in Europe.

a) Entitlements generally reflect those for full-time, full-year private sector employees, working a five-day week, who have been working for their current employer for one year. In some countries (e.g. Finland, Japan, Korea, Mexico, Poland and Turkey) the statutory minimum annual leave entitlement varies with tenure.

b) Information generally refers to public holidays set at the national or federal level. In some countries, this is subject to variation across regions and/or cantons/provinces/states. Excludes public holidays set permanently on non-working days (e.g. Sundays). In some countries (e.g. Belgium, Luxembourg, Spain, the United Kingdom) workers are entitled to an extra day's leave 'in lieu' if a public holiday falls on a non-working day, while in others (e.g. France, Malta) they are not. In some countries (e.g. Korea, the United Kingdom) there is no statutory right to pay on public holidays.

c) In Germany, public holidays are regulated almost entirely at the state level. The number of paid public holidays varies between 10 and 13, depending on the state.

d) In Hungary, the statutory minimum annual leave entitlement increases with age, up to a minimum of 30 days for workers aged 45 or over. The entitlement here reflects the minimum entitlement for workers aged under 25.

- e) The statistical data for Israel are supplied by and under the responsibility of the relevant Israeli authorities. The use of such data by the OECD is without prejudice to the status of the Golan Heights, East Jerusalem and Israeli settlements in the West Bank under the terms of international law.
- f) In Switzerland, the only federal statutory holiday is the Swiss national day (1st August). The cantons may designate up to 8 days as additional public holidays.
- g) In the United Kingdom, public holidays do not have to be given as paid leave and an employer can choose to include public holidays as part of a worker's statutory annual leave entitlement.
- h) Information on public holidays in the United States reflects federal holidays designated by the U.S. government. In the private sector, the offer of paid leave remains at the discretion of the employer.
- i) In Cyprus, public holidays are regulated either by agreements between the employer and the employee or via collective agreements.
- j) Footnote by Turkey: The information in this document with reference to "Cyprus" relates to the southern part of the Island. There is no single authority representing both Turkish and Greek Cypriot people on the Island. Turkey recognizes the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus (TRNC). Until a lasting and equitable solution is found within the context of United Nations, Turkey shall preserve its position concerning the "Cyprus issue".
- k) Footnote by all the European Union Member States of the OECD and the European Commission: The Republic of Cyprus is recognized by all members of the United Nations with the exception of Turkey. The information in this document relates to the area under the effective control of the Government of the Republic of Cyprus.

The majority of OECD countries provide employees with an entitlement to leave to care for sick or ill family members, although the exact details of these leaves differ considerably from one country to another (Table PF2.3.B). Most OECD countries provide employed parents with a least some kind of entitlement to leave to care for an ill child, either as a specific provision or as part of broader entitlement. However, many also provide employees with a wider entitlement to leave to care for other (adult) family members. In most cases, qualifying 'family members' are limited to partners/spouses, parents and sometimes siblings, only. In some countries (e.g. Australia, the Netherlands, and Sweden), however, these wider entitlements can be used to care for family members and/or household members more generally.

Leaves to care for family members are often separated into short-term leaves to be used in case of a non-serious illness, and longer-term leaves to care for those with a serious and/or terminal illness. Leaves for non-serious illnesses are often provided in the form of an annual entitlement, with employees entitled to a certain number of days or weeks per year. In Austria, for example, employees have an individual entitlement to 2 weeks leave per year to care for a child, while in the Netherlands employees can take 10 days per year to care for an ill child, partner, parent or other household member. However, in some countries (e.g. Estonia, Finland, Spain, Switzerland) leaves for non-serious illnesses are provided 'per episode', with employees entitled to take a certain number of days or weeks on each occasion that a qualifying family member requires care.

Longer leaves to care for seriously ill family members are almost always provided on a 'per episode' basis, albeit with the length of the 'per episode' entitlement differing considerably from country to country. In many countries these longer-term entitlements provide a right to leave for somewhere between two and six months. In Germany, for example, workers can take up to six months to care for a dependent family member in need of long-term care. In some countries (e.g. France, Portugal) employees may in at least some circumstances take leave for up to three or four years. In Japan, the entitlement is set for the cared-for person – each individual has a personal entitlement to 93 days across their own lifetime, which is to be used by the individual's family members in case of serious illness.

The presence and/or level of payment differs considerably across countries and across the type of leave. Leaves for non-serious illnesses are frequently paid, particularly when the entitlement is child-specific, but this is not always the case – in Belgium, France, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States, for example, short-term care leave is unpaid even when the leave is taken to care for a child, although the employer can provide payment if they wish. On occasion (e.g. Finland), payment is dependent on collective agreement. Longer-term entitlements for seriously ill family members are less likely to be paid, although again there are exceptions. In Belgium, employees taking long-term leave to care for a seriously ill family member can receive flat-rate payments for up to 1 year. In Germany, long-term care leave is unpaid but users are entitled to receive an interest-free loan from the Federal Office for the Family and Civil Engagement.
