Champion Mayors Initiative Podcast: Gender Equality and the COVID-19 Recovery Opportunity

As COVID-19 continues to affect lives and livelihoods around the world, we can already see that the pandemic and its economic fallout are having a regressive effect on gender equality. Local governments can implement policies to prevent local outbreaks and soften the pandemic’s social and economic fallout in cities. In a series of discussions, Champion Mayor Lisa Helps, City of Victoria (Canada) and Diana Rodríguez Franco, Secretary of Women in Bogota, will share insights and lessons learned on how women are leading a transformative COVID-19 recovery and how gender related issues factor into their cities’ administrations current and future priorities.

From Recovery to Sustainable Development: Strategic Approaches to Financing and Policies for Gender Equality and Women’s Empowerment

Launch of the latest data on development finance for gender equality

In response to the COVID-19 pandemic, development partners are reprogramming their agendas and looking for ways to step up their support to developing countries. The OECD policy brief Response, recovery and prevention in the coronavirus (COVID-19) pandemic in developing countries: Women and girls on the frontlines (2020) highlights that women as economic actors have been strongly affected by the pandemic and illustrates the urgency of putting women and gender equality at the core of recovery and longer term development efforts. It is essential that OECD countries sustain and increase their financial support for gender equality and women’s empowerment, in particular in the economic and productive sectors where support is limited, and also in key sectors of health and infectious disease control.

In this event, the OECD Development Co-operation Directorate will launch new data and analysis on development finance for gender equality and women’s empowerment.

Moderator: Mayumi Endoh, Deputy Director, OECD Development Co-operation Directorate

Scene-setting presentation: Susanna Moorehead, Chair of the Development Assistance Committee (DAC)

Panel speakers:

Margaret Kobia, Cabinet Secretary, Ministry of Public Service and Gender, Kenya
Ruairi de Burca, Director General, Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Ireland
Amb. Madeleine Chenette, Ambassador and Permanent Representative of Canada to the OECD
Jorge Moreira da Silva, Director, OECD Development Co-operation Directorate
Joanne Sandler, Senior associate, Gender at Work
Amb. Anna Brandt, Ambassador and Permanent Representative of Sweden to the OECD
Launch of the Report: Man enough? Measuring Norms of Masculinities to Promote Women's Empowerment

In this event, the OECD Development Centre will launch the new report, Man enough? Measuring masculine norms to promote women’s empowerment.

The virtual event aims to:

- Shed light on the ways masculine norms can either hinder or promote women’s empowerment and gender equality;
- Present the indicators that can be used to measure and monitor changing masculinities and discuss the state of data availability;
- Highlight the key role policy makers can play in addressing restrictive masculinities to promote women’s empowerment and men’s wellbeing.

Thank you” doesn’t pay the bills:
join EPIC and close the gender pay gap

CSW event hosted by Switzerland

The Equal Pay International Coalition (EPIC) was launched in 2017 to upscale efforts and find solutions to achieve pay equity. The Coalition is growing with new members representing governments, workers’ organizations, employers’ organizations and private sector, civil society and academia. The Coalition is led by the International Labour Organization, UN Women and the OECD. It provides a platform for peer-to-peer exchanges, capacity building and technical advisory services.

This event will be an opportunity to amplify interest in innovative and practical solutions and in promising global initiatives to reduce the gender pay gap, also in times of crisis. Special guests will engage in an interactive discussion to advance equal pay for work of equal value globally and take tailored action at country level.

Speakers:

Angel Gurría, Secretary-General of the OECD (by video message)
Imene Zahouani Houime, Minister of Women, Family and Older Persons, Tunisia;

CSW side event on Masculinities: “Shifting masculine norms to promote women’s economic empowerment”

Event hosted by Austria and the OECD Development Centre

This side-event will highlight the importance of masculinities in the economic, political and private spheres, the role they play in women’s economic empowerment, and their impact on the well-being of men and boys. Furthermore, it will convene a diverse group of panellists to discuss what policies and programmes can promote gender-equitable masculine norms that support women’s empowerment and gender equality in practice.

The virtual side-event will:
- Make the case that restrictive masculinities hinder women’s economic empowerment while also harming the well-being of men and boys.
- Underscore that tackling these restrictive masculinities has the potential to improve both women’s and men’s well-being.
- Highlight the importance of collecting data and evidence while emphasising the key role policy makers and grassroots organisations can play in facilitating gender-equitable masculine norms.

Opening Remarks:
Désirée Schweitzer, Director General for Development Cooperation, Director General for Development Cooperation and Humanitarian Assistance, Federal Ministry for European and International Affairs, Austria (TBC)
Juan Yermo, Chief of Staff, OECD

Show me the Money: How Pay Transparency Policies can Help Close the Gender Wage Gap

Women bring home 87 cents for every dollar a man brings home, on average, across OECD countries. This gender wage gap has stubbornly persisted over time. Yet new pay transparency policies offer a simple but potentially powerful tool to help close this gap: they require companies to share information publicly on how much male and female employees earn.

How do wage transparency measures work in OECD countries, and how well do they work? Does public, staff and government awareness of wage inequalities help drive fairer outcomes?

This webinar will feature government experts discussing how wage transparency processes work in their country, what measures work well, and where there is still room for improvement.

Gender Mainstreaming in the Anti-corruption Agencies of APEC Member Economies

Women often remain under-represented in justice sector organisations. This is due to well-documented occupational segregation and gender specific challenges women often face in such organisations. This session, organised as part of the OECD 2021 Global Anti-Corruption and Integrity Forum, will present the preliminary results of a survey of the anti-corruption agencies of 21 APEC economies to illuminate how women are faring in such organisations. The final results will be released as an APEC publication in April 2021 and will provide a foundation for developing a gender mainstreaming training guide.

Panel on “Mind the gender gap: Connecting business and governments to build back better”

The coronavirus pandemic presents new challenges to gender equality. Women face barriers to access digital technology, an increased risk of violence, job losses, unequal access to financial and non-financial supports, and a growing share of the already large caretaking and domestic burden. Furthermore, women’s jobs, businesses, and incomes are under greater threat from the widespread economic fallout from the crisis. Together with climate change and environmental sustainability, gender equality is at the core of building back better. This panel session explores the role of the private sector in promoting an inclusive recovery, and how the policy-enabling environment can support companies adhering to gender inclusion and empowerment commitments in times of crisis.

This session will discuss:

- What are some key emerging private sector practices and initiatives supporting women employees and those in value chains and is the broader public policy environment assisting these efforts?
- How are companies ensuring their wider social impact is supporting progress towards gender equality in the response to the COVID-19 crisis and in the longer term?

Gender equality in LAC in times of COVID-19: Towards a better sharing of paid and unpaid work

The COVID-19 crisis has exacerbated challenges already facing women in the Latin America and Caribbean region. Amongst those barriers is the inequitable sharing of paid and unpaid work, which brakes women’s ability to access quality jobs and social safety nets. This session will look at these challenges, and explore potential policy options, through the lens of two forthcoming reports on Chile and Peru undertaken within the EU Facility Project “Gender equality in LAC: Towards a better sharing of paid and unpaid work” and drawing upon the experience of the NinasSTEM Pueden Initiative in Mexico. Innovations to Address Women’s Brain Health Inequalities

The COVID-19 crisis has exposed sex and gender differences in brain and mental health disorders, as we see news of a dangerous hike in depression and suicide, particularly among women. As we try to fight the virus, we are also forced to address how our behaviours and health are impacted by brain and mental disease – the area with the highest unmet medical need. Sex differences in brain health are very marked – research shows that dementia rates are higher in women compared to men, similar figures for depression and anxiety. The brain capital (brain health and brain skills in a brain economy) of women is therefore crucial as part of a Systemic Recovery. As part of the New Approaches to Economic Challenges (NAEC) Neuroscience-inspired Policy Initiative and the OECD gender mainstreaming work, brain experts will explore how women and men brains are different and how understanding these differences might inform gender-sensitive policies. Please join us for this discussion!

Lack of access to quality infrastructure disproportionately affects women and girls, hampering education, employment and many other opportunities. Women and men use infrastructure services for different needs and responsibilities. In Tanzania, for instance, the time women spend on transportation-related tasks is four times higher than men. In Africa, women do 90% of the work of collecting water and fuelwood. Globally, women and girls spend 200 million hours every day collecting water. Women are also the most exposed to household pollution due to the use of fuelwood for cooking. Additionally, women face a large gender gap in access to digital infrastructure.

Mainstreaming a gender perspective into quality infrastructure development provides women with more time and opportunities for education, leisure and economic activities, while addressing women’s specific needs and vulnerabilities. For instance, accelerating a shift to clean energy would dramatically improve women’s livelihoods, prevent premature death and save time, while mitigating climate change risks. Finally, enhancing women’s access to the internet and mobile phones would promote financial inclusion, through greater access to information and business opportunities. This DevTalk is an opportunity to address pressing questions such as: how can we accelerate gender mainstreaming in infrastructure development? How can gender considerations be effectively integrated across all phases of infrastructure development? And how to ensure women’s participation in the decision-making process?

In tax, gender-blind is not gender-neutral: how tax policy in times of COVID-19 must consider women (March on Gender 2021: Tax and Gender)

Women are at the core of the fight against the COVID-19 crisis: they make up the vast majority of healthcare workers and shoulder much of the childcare and home schooling burden during lockdowns. And while tax policy measures play a crucial role in supporting individuals and businesses as we navigate this crisis, the gender impact of taxation is often overlooked – with serious consequences for gender equality. To ensure that the tax system does not inadvertently reinforce gender biases in society, governments need to include the impact of taxes on gender as a key policy dimension in their tax policy responses to COVID-19.

When it comes to tax and gender, let’s #BuildBackBetter!

OECD-ITF High-level Dialogue: Addressing the Gender Bias in Artificial Intelligence Data

Description
Data is the lifeblood of the digital economy, and is a critical input to technologies like artificial intelligence (AI). Without data, there would be no AI. So it goes without saying that the quality and volume of data used in AI is of the utmost importance. If and when data used in AI are biased – by omission or by choice – then the resulting algorithms can lead to biased outcomes. In the case of gender bias, biased AI systems risk perpetuating and exacerbating gender-based inequalities that exist in our physical world, but AI can also be used to help identify and correct for human bias in society.

This event will bring together experts to explore the gender bias in AI data. Speakers will be asked to reflect on questions such as:

- What are the best ways to combat gender bias in AI training data?
- What is the role of policymakers and data governance strategies and policies in addressing the issues presented above? How can data governance help in overcoming challenges related to the gender bias in data and address gender-related AI concerns?
- How would the implementation of the OECD AI principles help address gender bias?

Gender and Data Bias in Transport, with a focus on Artificial Intelligence and Machine Learning.

The ITF Corporate Partnership Board (CPB) is the International Transport Forum’s platform for engaging with the private sector and enriching global transport policy discussion with a business perspective. Gender equality and women’s empowerment are integral to achieving the UN SDGs, in particular, Goal 5 on achieving gender equality and empowering all women and girls. With nearly 3 million employees worldwide, the companies belonging to the ITF’s Corporate Partnership Board play an important role in helping achieve these objectives.

A gender gap exists within our transport data. The absence of this data on women, together with an awareness of this gap, can lead to data-based decisions which disadvantage women.

AI systems are only as good as the data they rely on. Artificial intelligence biased on such datasets may result in the systems learning the values embedded in them.

Transparency in machine learning and AI-powered systems is key. This workshop will address these topics.

Women’s entrepreneurship and COVID-19: Ensuring the gender gap doesn’t grow

Although women are only about half as likely as men to be involved in starting a business, this gender gap has been slowly closing over the past two decades. However, the COVID-19 pandemic has had uneven impacts across sectors and types of businesses and women entrepreneurs have been disproportionately affected. There is a risk that COVID-19 will undo decades of progress in advancing female entrepreneurship. This panel discussion will explore questions such as:

- Have COVID-19 support measures been effective at reaching and supporting female entrepreneurs?
- How can these support measures more effectively reach and support female entrepreneurs and the
- How should the female entrepreneurship policies post-COVID-19 be different to those of the past?

Launch of the Publication: Social Institutions and Gender Index (SIGI) 2021 Regional Report for Southeast Asia

In this event, the OECD Development Centre will launch the Social Institutions and Gender Index (SIGI) 2021 Regional Report for Southeast Asia.

The virtual launch aims to:

- Monitor and identify remaining challenges in addressing discriminatory social institutions - formal and informal laws, norms and practices—which continue to hinder women’s empowerment in Southeast Asia;
- Share critical insights on the negative consequences of discriminatory social institutions on several areas that are critical for women’s human development in the region;
- Flag concrete examples of innovative approaches to challenge gender norms, promote women’s rights, enhance gender equality and accelerate social transformation.

Building a gender-responsive supply chain due diligence programme: Learnings and best practices from the minerals sector

Globally, momentum is building in terms of commitments to achieving gender equality, and workplaces and communities affected by mineral supply chains are no exception. Governments, the private sector and civil society recognize that empowering women and girls is one of the most effective ways to achieve inclusive economic and social development outcomes. This session, co-organized with the Women’s Rights and Mining Group, will highlight some best practices and tools being used in the minerals sector to promote a gender-responsive approach to supply chain due diligence by companies, and explore what governments and civil society are doing to drive change and support company efforts. The session will put particular focus on women’s rights and access to economic opportunity in artisanal and small-scale mining, including as part of efforts to formalize the sector.

Lauch of the Publication: "Gender and the Environment: Building the Evidence Base and Advancing Policy Actions to Achieve the SDGs"

The relationship between gender equality and environmental goals is one of the most overlooked areas in evidence gathering and policy analysis. Even though the relevance of gender to environmental issues is being discussed since the early 1970s, only a few countries integrate gender and environmental goals into their policy-making effectively. The report analyses the interlinkages between achieving gender equality and women’s empowerment, while positively affecting the environment, using the Sustainable Development Goals framework. It looks at the gender-environmental sustainability nexus through nine environment-related SDGs with a special focus on data challenges and economic benefits analysis. It highlights the need for an integrated approach to gender equality and environmental sustainability in all policy areas and sectors. It proposes a set of policy measures that could both support more systematic evidence gathering on gender-differentiated environmental impacts, and provide for action that is more effective.
