Scene-setting: Barbara Ubaldi, Head of Digital Government and Data Unit, Open and Innovative Government Division, Public Governance Directorate, OECD

The digital transformation has drastically changed the traditional mechanisms of democracy. The use of digital technologies and data has empowered citizens with a new set of tools to engage in the democratic practices and expanded political participation. Nevertheless, the rapid digitalisation has also presented challenges that debilitate democratic processes such as the protection of fundamental rights, destabilised information ecosystems and democratic intermediation. In the digital age, the new way of governing and legislating is called for to address these challenges. In the scene-setting presentation, the OECD will present how to build a robust governance to support digital transformation and on imperative issues that need to be addressed to build a secure and inclusive future.

Christian Reimsbach-Kounatze, Economist and Policy analyst, Data Governance and Privacy / Security in the Digital Economy, Digital Economy Policy Division, Directorate for Science, Technology and Innovation, OECD

As the digital transformation accelerates, our economies and societies are increasingly vulnerable to cyberattacks that can harm organisations' assets, reputation and competitiveness. Such attacks may even result in companies shutting down and, with the development of the Internet of Things (IoT), threaten human safety. The surge of ransomware attacks is the most recent illustration of this trend, affecting operators of critical activities such as gas distribution and healthcare.

This session highlights how to strengthen security and trust, without inhibiting the benefits of the digital transformation and its potential to increase well-being, innovation and growth. The session focuses on the economic and social aspects of cybersecurity, as opposed to aspects that are purely technical, directly related to criminal law enforcement or national security. It highlights in particular the importance of digital security risk management as a key characteristic of the OECD approach to digital security with a focus on (i) enhancing the security of products and services and (ii) encouraging vulnerability treatment.
