

Japan-OECD Policy Forum on Urban Development and Green Growth

Agenda (preliminary draft)

Background

Cities have a unique role to play in creating synergies between environmental and economic objectives, which is essential to advancing “green growth” at national and global levels. Asian cities in particular are at the centre of this urban green growth challenge. Their development is characterised by rapid and continuous urbanisation on an unprecedented scale, with rapid economic growth led in most places by the manufacturing industry and rapidly increasing motorisation. The result has been escalating greenhouse gas emissions, sprawling urban development, inadequate infrastructure and local environmental impacts, as well as disparities in income, education levels and job opportunities in urban populations. This calls for urban green growth approaches that can take into account the specific and very diverse circumstances of Asian cities.

In the search for policy approaches that can promote sustainable urban growth, there are lessons that we can learn from across the OECD. Cities in Japan, in particular, have experienced rapid urbanisation and economic growth in the past and have accumulated policy experience and technologies that could be useful elsewhere. The Japan-OECD Policy Forum on Urban Development and Green Growth (14-16 October 2014, Tokyo, Japan) provides an opportunity to discuss policy options among Asian city leaders, government officials, international agencies and the business community. The three-day Forum consists of an expert meeting organised by OECD on its Urban Green Growth in Dynamic Asia project (14 October); a high-level policy roundtable jointly organised by MLIT and OECD (15 October) and a site visit arranged by MLIT to urban development practices in and around Tokyo (16 October).

The Japan-OECD Policy Forum on Urban Development and Green Growth is organised as a commemorative event for the 50th Anniversary of Japan's Accession to the OECD. The event is also part of the OECD Knowledge Sharing Platform on Urban Green Growth in Dynamic Asia and is supported by the OECD Knowledge Sharing Alliance (KSA). It is also supported by the United Nations Industrial Development Organisation (UNIDO).

DAY ONE: Tuesday 14 October 2014 – MLIT International Conference Room

Second Expert Meeting on the Urban Green Growth in Dynamic Asia Knowledge Sharing Platform

How to facilitate action for urban green growth by effective use of knowledge sharing?

	The objective of the Second Expert Meeting on the Urban Green Growth in Dynamic Asia Knowledge Sharing Platform is to disseminate the past, current and future activities of the OECD project “Urban Green Growth in Dynamic Asia” among the core Asian cities of the project, other interested cities, national governments and international communities.
